

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION
ADOPTED BY THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES
AUGUST 9-10, 2010

RECOMMENDATION

RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association acknowledges and supports United States Government efforts to combat money laundering and terrorist financing;

FURTHER RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association observes that voluntary, risk-based, and updated guidance would assist legal professionals to avoid money laundering and terrorist financing risks when providing services to clients;

FURTHER RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association adopts the Voluntary Good Practices Guidance for Lawyers to Detect and Combat Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing (“Good Practices Guidance”); and FURTHER RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association encourages state, local, and specialty bar associations to embrace the Good Practices Guidance and to educate legal professionals and law students regarding the risks addressed by the Guidance.

VOLUNTARY GOOD PRACTICES GUIDANCE FOR LAWYERS TO DETECT AND COMBAT MONEY LAUNDERING AND TERRORIST FINANCING

STATEMENT FROM UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF TREASURY

The Treasury Department welcomes this Good Practices paper as a useful step in protecting the legal profession as well as the broader financial system from the risks of money laundering and terrorist financing. Treasury looks forward to continuing engagement with the ABA to facilitate implementation of effective policies and procedures to protect against money laundering and terrorist financing.

VOLUNTARY GOOD PRACTICES GUIDANCE FOR LAWYERS TO DETECT AND COMBAT
MONEY LAUNDERING AND TERRORIST FINANCING

In 1989, the major industrialized nations formed an intergovernmental body known as the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering (“FATF”) to coordinate efforts to prevent money laundering in both the international financial system and the domestic financial systems of the member entities. FATF first issued a comprehensive plan, known as the Forty Recommendations, for combating money laundering that was intended to present the basic framework for anti-money laundering (“AML”) efforts and be of universal application.¹ The Forty Recommendations are a set of international standards and are not a binding international convention, but many countries (including the United States) have committed to implementing them.

A decade after the creation of FATF, FATF sought to enlist the support of so-called “gatekeepers” to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. “Gatekeepers” include certain designated non-financial businesses and professions (“DNFBPs”) such as lawyers, notaries, trust and company service providers (“TCSPs”), real estate agents, accountants, and auditors who assist with transactions involving the movement of money in the domestic and international financial systems. This effort is known as the “Gatekeeper Initiative.”

A month after the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks in the United States, FATF expanded its mandate to address terrorist financing and issued the Special Recommendations on Terrorist Financing. The Special Recommendations, originally comprised of eight recommendations, are intended to supplement the Forty Recommendations and are designed to combat the funding of terrorist acts and terrorist organizations. A ninth special recommendation was added in October 2004 to address concerns with cash couriers, thereby transforming the Special Recommendations into what have become known as the Nine Special Recommendations. The Forty Recommendations and the Nine Special Recommendations are sometimes referred to as the “40+9 Recommendations.” In sum, the 40+9 Recommendations, together with their interpretative notes, constitute the international standards for combating money laundering and terrorist financing.

The 40+9 Recommendations encourage countries to develop a risk-based approach to prevent money laundering and to combat the financing of terrorism (“CFT”). The theoretical and practical underpinning of the risk-based approach is to ensure that the limited resources (both governmental and private sector) available to fight money laundering and terrorist financing are employed and allocated in the most efficient manner possible so that the activities posing the greatest risks receive the most attention and are targeted with the greatest funding. In this manner, the risk-based approach differs fundamentally from a rules-based approach. Under a rules-based approach, a person would be required to comply with particular laws, rules, or regulations irrespective of the underlying quantum or degree of risk.

In June 2007, FATF collaborated with representatives of the international banking and securities industries to formulate risk-based guidance for financial institutions. Known as the “Guidance on the Risk-Based Approach to Combating Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing—High Level Principles and Procedures” (“Financial Institution Guidance”), this document was the first risk-based guidance paper issued by FATF for a specific industry sector.

Shortly after the issuance of the Financial Institution Guidance, FATF met with representatives of the DNFBP sectors, including lawyers, to determine if they would be willing to engage in a similar collaborative effort to develop risk-based guidance for their businesses and professions. The DNFBPs agreed to do so, and following such efforts FATF ultimately issued separate risk-based guidance papers in 2008 for every DNFBP sector, including lawyers.

During the negotiations with FATF over the guidance for lawyers, representatives of the legal profession emphasized to FATF the importance of ensuring that any risk-based approach developed did not undermine the attorney-client privilege or the duty of client confidentiality or otherwise impede the delivery of legal services generally. After over a year of intense debate and discussion, in October 2008 FATF issued risk-based guidance for the legal profession entitled “RBA Guidance for Legal Professionals” (“Lawyer Guidance”).²

The Lawyer Guidance contains 126 separately numbered paragraphs and organizationally tracks the Financial Institutions Guidance that served as a template for the DNFBP guidance papers. The Lawyer Guidance is a complex document that addresses different audiences (e.g., private sector and public authorities), undertakes to identify the AML and CFT issues specific to the legal profession, and outlines the risk factors that lawyers need to consider in developing a risk-based system.

The Lawyer Guidance is “high level” guidance intended to provide a broad framework for implementing a risk-based approach for the legal profession. It does not offer detailed direction on the application of this approach to specific factual situations, nor does it take into account the practical realities of the practice of law in an increasingly complex environment or attempt to address jurisdictional variations among the FATF member countries. For those reasons, the Lawyer Guidance urges the legal profession generally, or in different countries, to develop “good practice in the design and implementation of an effective risk-based approach.”³

Accordingly, the purpose of this paper is to assist members of the legal profession in the United States in designing and implementing effective risk-based approaches consistent with the broad contours of the Lawyer Guidance. It is not intended to be, nor should it be construed as, a statement of the standard of care governing the activities of lawyers in implementing a risk-based approach to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. Rather, given the vast differences in practices, firms, and lawyers throughout the United States, this paper seeks only to serve as a resource that lawyers can use in developing their own voluntary risk-based approaches. At the same time, this paper is not intended to be an academic exercise. The federal government is under pressure from FATF and others (including development agencies, the Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development, the International Monetary Fund, The World Bank, and the United Nations) to adopt legislation implementing some or all of the provisions of the Recommendations relating to the legal profession. An overarching purpose of this paper is to encourage lawyers to develop and implement voluntary, but effective, risk-based approaches consistent with the Lawyer Guidance, thereby negating the need for federal regulation of the legal profession.

To assist practitioners in understanding the practical implications of a particular provision in the Lawyer Guidance, this paper provides various “Practice Pointers.” These Practice Pointers are intended to offer insight into the Lawyer Guidance provision in question, especially from the perspective of a practitioner.

OVERVIEW

The first section of this paper will provide an overview of the mechanics of money laundering and terrorist financing so that practitioners can better understand and achieve the goals of the United States' and FATF's AML/CFT efforts. The sections that follow will then describe the risk-based approach and recommended client due diligence, identify those lawyers who are subject to the Lawyer Guidance, specify the activities that are addressed by the Lawyer Guidance, list and analyze the risk categories and risk variables, and conclude with a suggested protocol for client intake and assessment and a discussion of the importance of on-going education and continuing legal education efforts in this area.

The “practice pointers” appearing throughout the text, which take the form of hypothetical fact patterns to highlight specific issues or points, are designed to provide practical guidance and insights to practitioners. They may also elaborate on a statement or concept contained in the Lawyer Guidance.

What is Money Laundering?

Money laundering “is the criminal practice of filtering ill-gotten gains, or ‘dirty’ money, through a series of transactions; in this way the funds are ‘cleaned’ so that they appear to be proceeds from legal activities.”⁴ Money laundering was made a federal crime in the U.S. under the Money Laundering Control Act of 1986 and is addressed under 18 U.S.C. § 1956 (laundering of monetary instruments) and § 1957 (engaging in monetary transactions in property derived from specified unlawful activity). Money laundering involves three distinct stages: the placement stage, the layering stage, and the integration stage.⁵ The placement stage is the stage at which funds from illegal activity, or funds intended to support illegal activity, are first introduced into the financial system. The layering stage involves further disguising and distancing the illicit funds from their illegal source through the use of a series of frequently complex financial transactions. This stage may include the creation of tiered entities and complicated entity structures designed to conceal the source of the illicit funds. The integration phase of money laundering results in the illicit funds, now laundered, returning to “a status of expendability in the hands of the organized crime group that generated them.”⁶

A 2008 federal district court case also illustrates a money laundering scheme whereby the defendant was convicted of, among other things, conspiring to commit money laundering. Factually, the defendant led a scheme that involved manipulating documents associated with real estate sales and closings to obtain excess mortgage loan proceeds generated from the property sales. The defendant recruited unsuspecting investors to purchase low income, dilapidated, and depressed properties at prices artificially inflated above legitimate fair-market values (placement phase). The mortgages were financed with fraudulent loans facilitated, brokered, and closed by the defendant and his conspirators (layering phase). The conspirators provided the down payments on the properties, paid kick backs to the loan applicants, and opened bank accounts to disguise the true nature, location, source, ownership, and control of the proceeds and profits from the transactions (integration phase).⁷

What is Terrorist Financing?

Terrorist financing includes the financing of terrorists, terrorist acts, and terrorist organizations. FATF defines a “terrorist” basically as anyone who commits, participates in, organizes, or contributes to the commission of terrorist acts. FATF defines “terrorist acts” as including any act intended to cause death or serious bodily injury to a civilian, or to any other person not taking an active part in the hostilities in a situation of armed conflict, when the purpose of such act, by its nature or context, is to intimidate a population, or to compel a government or an international organization to do or to abstain from doing any act. The definition also includes acts that constitute an offense within the scope of, and as defined in, certain specified treaties.⁸ Finally, a “terrorist organization” refers to any group of terrorists that: (a) commits, or attempts to commit, a terrorist act by any means, directly or indirectly, unlawfully and willfully, (b) participates as an accomplice in terrorist acts, (c) organizes or directs others to commit terrorist acts, or (d) contributes to the commission of terrorist acts by a group of persons acting with a common purpose when the contribution is made intentionally and with the aim of furthering the terrorist act or with the knowledge of the intention of the group to commit a terrorist act.⁹

The Lawyer Guidance acknowledges that it is significantly more challenging to detect and identify terrorist financing than potential money laundering and other suspicious activity. Transactions facilitating terrorist financing often do not exhibit the same characteristics as conventional money laundering. For example, terrorist financing

⁹ See <http://www.fatf-gafi.org/dataoecd/16/54/40339628.pdf> (contains definitions used in this paragraph). For purposes of the definition of “terrorist organization,” it does not matter whether the terrorist act actually occurs. Prohibitions on terrorism and terrorist financing also are mandated by the United Nations and federal law. United Nations Security Council Resolution (“UNSCR”) 1267 (and its progeny) calls on Member States to ban travel for, freeze the funds and financial resources of, and impose an arms embargo on members of the Taliban and Al Qaeda. See <http://www.un.org/sc/committees/1267/>. The United States implements UNSCR 1267 pursuant to the United Nations Participation Act (“UNPA”), 22 U.S.C. § 287c, and the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (“IEEPA”), 50 U.S.C. § 1701 et seq. The U.S. Department of the Treasury’s Office of Foreign Assets Control (“OFAC”) administers the regulations promulgated pursuant to IEEPA and the UNPA. In particular, pursuant to OFAC’s regulations, U.S. persons (including lawyers) are prohibited from engaging in transactions (including the exchange of services) with certain terrorists, those they own or control and those who are acting on their behalf. These persons (individuals and entities) are identified on the SDN List (as defined in text accompanying footnote 9 below). OFAC’s terrorism regulations are implemented pursuant to the IEEPA, the UNPA, and the Anti-terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, 18 U.S.C. § 2332d, among others. OFAC administers the following sanctions programs specifically targeting terrorists, those they own or control, and those who provide material support to terrorists: The Global Terrorism Sanctions Regulations, 31 C.F.R. 594; Terrorism Sanctions Regulations, 31 C.F.R. 595; the Terrorism List Government Sanctions Regulations, 31 C.F.R. 596; and the Foreign Terrorist Organizations Sanctions Regulations, 31 C.F.R. 597.

may involve low dollar value transactions and the appearance of innocence (such as purportedly charitable activities), and can involve a variety of sources (such as business, criminal activity, self-funded, and state sponsors of terrorism). The Lawyer Guidance thus does not comprehensively address the application of the risk-based approach to terrorist financing.¹⁰

Practice pointer: A common method of terrorist financing identified to date has been the movement of funds donated to cross-border (i.e., between the United States and another jurisdiction, not between two states) non-profit organizations. For example, a not for profit organization (“NPO”) in the United States may appear, from all outwardly signs, to be operating legitimately, but through multiple transfers and manipulations of funds, may in fact be funneling funds offshore to an organization with hidden terrorist ties. Alternatively, the terrorist group may actually run the NPO. An examination of available public source information, including the charity’s tax return, Form 990 PF, the charity’s website, corporate formation documents, and other due diligence methods may disclose how funds are ultimately used. However, the terrorist link may not be evident from a review of the charity’s tax return. The practitioner should thus inquire of the charity what due diligence procedures it has in place and to identify the recipient of the funds. If funds are paid to foreign charities or to private charities, then the charity is supposed to monitor and keep records of how the funds are used. As part of the client due diligence (as defined below), the practitioner should ask for these records and in appropriate circumstances check the list of Specially Designated Nationals and Blocked Persons (“SDN List”) maintained by OFAC.¹¹

What is the Risk-Based Approach?

The risk-based approach is grounded in the premise that the limited resources (both governmental and private sector) available to combat money laundering and terrorist financing should be employed and allocated in the most efficient manner possible so that the sources of the greatest risks receive the most attention. A risk-based approach is intended to ensure that measures to prevent or mitigate money laundering and terrorist financing are commensurate with the risks identified, thereby facilitating an efficient allocation of this limited pool of resources.

The proportionate nature of the risk-based approach means that higher risk areas should be subject to enhanced procedures, such as enhanced client due diligence (“CDD”) and enhanced transaction monitoring. By contrast, simplified, modified, or reduced controls may apply in lower risk areas (for purposes of this Guidance, “reduced” shall hereafter include “simplified” and “modified”). In no case does FATF suggest that the risk may ever be so low as to eliminate any form or level of CDD.

An effective risk-based approach involves identifying and categorizing money laundering and terrorist financing risks and establishing reasonable controls based on the risks identified. This paper will identify the risk categories and offer voluntary good practices designed to assist lawyers in detecting money laundering while satisfying their professional obligations.

Practice pointer: For example, a general practitioner in rural Montana would have no reason to engage in extensive due diligence or know your client measures (as discussed below) if a long term client called the lawyer and asked her to form a limited liability company for the purpose of buying a ranch. However, if that same lawyer received a call from a new and unknown client saying that the client had just won several million dollars at poker in Nevada and needed the lawyer to form a limited liability company to buy a ranch, then a risk based approach would suggest that in this latter case, more extensive due diligence and know your client measures would be appropriate.

What is Client Due Diligence?

The 40+9 Recommendations require that lawyers perform CDD when they perform or carry out specified activities.¹² CDD is intended to assist lawyers in forming a reasonable belief that they have appropriate awareness of the true identity of each client¹³ and the true nature of the matter they have been engaged to undertake. CDD is not intended to place the lawyer in an adversarial relationship with the client; rather, the purpose is to make sure the lawyer knows the true identity and business goals of the client.

CDD should be performed at client intake, but it also should be periodically performed during the course of the engagement. The level of required CDD varies depending on the risk profile of the client. For some clients, “basic” CDD may be appropriate. For clients posing a higher risk, “enhanced” CDD may be necessary. At the other end of the spectrum, reduced CDD may be sufficient. The relative levels of CDD are described in greater detail below.

The three (3) steps required to be taken in “basic” CDD are as follows:

¹² See Recommendation 12.

¹³ LAWYER GUIDANCE ¶ 114.

- Identify and appropriately verify the identity of each client on a timely basis.¹⁴
- Identify the beneficial owner,¹⁵ and take reasonable measures to verify the identity of the beneficial owner of the client such that the lawyer is reasonably satisfied that the lawyer knows who the beneficial owner is. Clients generally should be subject to the full range of CDD measures, including the requirement to identify the beneficial owner in accordance with Lawyer Guidance ¶ 114. The purpose of identifying beneficial ownership is to ascertain those natural persons who exercise effective control over a client, whether by means of ownership, voting shares, contract rights, or otherwise. Lawyers may use a risk-based approach when determining the extent to which they are required to identify the beneficial owner, depending on the type of client, suspicious behavior that might suggest someone is seeking to conceal the true party in interest, the difficulty of ascertaining the identity, the business relationship and transaction, and other appropriate factors, including the geographic location of the client.

The issue of whether a lawyer must, in all cases, identify the beneficial owners of a client was a highly controversial issue in the drafting of the Lawyer Guidance. Although FATF initially sought to adopt a rules-based approach that would require lawyers to always identify the beneficial owners of a client, after strong opposition from representatives of the legal profession, FATF ultimately agreed that this analysis would be subject to a risk-based approach. Consequently, depending on the risks presented by the client, it may be appropriate to identify the beneficial owners of a client. Lawyers should do so only when, from a risk-based standpoint, such an analysis is warranted. It is impractical in some instances for a lawyer to identify the beneficial owners of a client. The cost, time, and effort to undertake such an analysis is typically disproportionate to advancing the goals of detecting and preventing money laundering and terrorist financing unless other factors are present.

Practice pointer: For example, if a lawyer is dealing with a syndication of investors or financiers or an entity that has a large number of owners but is not publicly traded, ascertaining the client’s beneficial owners would be extremely time consuming. Unless other facts put the lawyer on notice that something unusual or suspicious were transpiring, the process of determining all the beneficial owners of the client would be disproportionate to the level of risk.

¹⁴ See Section 6 for a more detailed discussion of this step.

- Obtain information to understand the client's circumstances and business depending on the nature, scope, and timing of the services to be provided. This information may be obtained from clients in the normal course of the lawyers' acceptance of the retention and receipt of instructions from the client.

Who is covered by the Lawyer Guidance?

The Lawyer Guidance covers “legal professionals,” which includes lawyers and notaries.¹⁶ The Lawyer Guidance is principally focused on transactional lawyers, especially those creating entities and those handling funds, but not all lawyers are subject to the Lawyer Guidance. For instance, in-house lawyers are not covered by the Lawyer Guidance.¹⁷ Several other exclusions are described below.

Importantly, the Lawyer Guidance is limited to those lawyers who “prepare for and carry out specified activities.” The Lawyer Guidance does not define “prepare for and carry out,” but it does define “specified activities” as described below. Thus, even if the lawyer is subject to the Lawyer Guidance, CDD may not be required because of the particular nature of the proposed engagement.

Local and special counsel engagements present unique and challenging issues. Local counsel may be engaged by the primary transaction counsel to assist on a discrete local law issue peripheral to an overall transaction and may have little or no direct involvement with the client. At the other extreme, local counsel may be intimately involved with the transaction, including drafting and negotiating the applicable transactional documents. The Lawyer Guidance recognizes that lawyers providing advice or services (such as a local law enforceability opinion) peripheral to the overall transaction who are not preparing for or carrying out the transaction may not be required to observe the applicable CDD and record-keeping obligations.¹⁸ In short, those lawyers would not be covered by the Lawyer Guidance. Section 4.7 below explores the issue of local and special counsel in greater detail.

A special situation arises for a lawyer who is serving as a trustee. FATF has issued not only Lawyer Guidance, but also risk-based guidance for trust and company service providers, another category of DNFBPs (“TCSP Guidance”).¹⁹ This would appear to create uncertainty as to which guidance a lawyer acting as a trustee is to follow. Generally speaking, a lawyer acting as a trustee need only follow the Lawyer Guidance; the primary exception is if the lawyer is offering the trustee services through a separate entity, such as a trust company. In this latter case, the lawyer should refer to the TCSP Guidance rather than the Lawyer Guidance. The TCSP Guidance imposes obligations on

¹⁷ LAWYER GUIDANCE ¶ 8 fn. 2.

¹⁸ LAWYER GUIDANCE ¶ 13. The record-keeping obligations are designed to ensure that documents, data, or information collected under the CDD process is kept up-to-date and relevant by undertaking reviews of existing records, particularly for higher risk categories of clients.

¹⁹ RBA GUIDANCE FOR TRUST AND COMPANY SERVICE PROVIDERS (TCSPs), Financial Action Task Force (issued June 17, 2008). http://www.fatf-gafi.org/newsEvents/0,3382,en_32250379_32235720_1_1_1_3_1,00.html

TCSPs that differ from those imposed on lawyers, thereby underscoring the importance of knowing which guidance applies.

What specified activities are covered by the Lawyer Guidance?

The “specified activities” (collectively, “Specified Activities” or, individually, “Specified Activity”) consist of the following five (5) categories: (a) buying and selling of real estate, (b) managing of client money, securities or other assets, (c) management of bank, savings or securities accounts, (d) organization of contributions for the creation, operation, or management of companies, and (e) creation, operation, or management of legal persons or arrangements, and buying and selling of business entities.²⁰

1. Buying and Selling of Real Estate. The Lawyer Guidance does not define “buying and selling of real estate.” The Specified Activity of buying and selling of real estate appears to apply to both residential and commercial purchase and sale transactions. No dollar limits or thresholds apply to this Specified Activity. However, this Specified Activity does not appear to encompass a number of real estate-related transactions, such as leasing transactions, the preparation of condominium documentation, or the negotiation of easement agreements that do not involve the immediate exchange of funds. Less clear is whether the financing of a purchase or sale of real estate constitutes a Specified Activity, which is discussed in more detail below. However, since financing and re-financing involve the movement of funds, practitioners should assume that these activities would constitute Specified Activities.

Practice pointer: A lawyer who prepares for and carries out the sale of real estate would need to perform the basic CDD and record-keeping requirements envisioned by the 40 +9 Recommendations. But that same lawyer who is engaged by a client to draft and negotiate leases for a shopping center or office complex is not preparing for or carrying out a transaction involving the buying and selling of real estate and need not perform CDD.

2. Managing of client money, securities or other assets. The Lawyer Guidance does not define “managing of client money, securities or other assets.” Here, as well as under items 3 and 4 below, the lawyer would in all cases be handling the client’s funds and, as emphasized above, FATF is particularly focused on the potential risk in situations where the lawyer is actually handling funds. In any situation where the lawyer controls the use, application, or disposition of funds or has signatory authority over the client’s financial account, the risk must be addressed at some level. Recognize, however, that in almost all cases the funds in the lawyer's control will have been transferred to the lawyer through a financial institution that has performed its own required due diligence and, in some cases, the lawyer should be able to rely on that in lieu of conducting the lawyer's own due diligence. In other cases, however, the financial institution may have simply satisfied itself that the money is flowing into the trust account of a reputable lawyer or law firm. Nonetheless, any time lawyers "touch the money" they should satisfy themselves as to the bona fides of the sources and ownership of the funds in some manner and should inquire of any involved financial institution as to any CDD performed by such institution.

Practice pointer: Lawyers should consider using third party escrow agents to avoid responsibility generally.

3. Management of bank, savings or securities accounts. The Lawyer Guidance does not define "management of bank, savings or securities accounts." In addition to the risks identified in item 2 above, a lawyer or a law firm must be particularly cognizant of the funds that move through the firm's trust account or client account. In this particular situation, the Lawyer Guidance would extend to trial lawyers who frequently hold funds in the firm's trust account.

Practice pointer: Lawyers should exercise caution to avoid situations where they are essentially providing banking services for their clients as opposed to merely holding client money for a legitimate transaction. For example, in a real estate sale, if the lawyer is being asked to make payments not just to mainstream lending institutions, but to more obscure recipients including private individuals whose identities are difficult to verify, the lawyer should exercise caution or treat this as a higher risk situation.²¹

4. Organization of contributions for the creation, operation, or management of companies. The Lawyer Guidance does not define "organization of contributions for the creation, operation, or management of companies."

Practice pointers:

- An example of this Specified Activity is when a lawyer prepares for or carries out a transaction where investors contribute capital to a legal entity. This category does not appear to cover financing or refinancing transactions because the funds are not being contributed to the company.

²¹ This discussion is derived from Section 11.2.3 of the Anti-Money Laundering Practice Note prepared by the Law Society of England and Wales (issued February 22, 2008). See <http://www.lawsociety.org.uk/productsandservices/practicenotes/aml/463.article>.

- In addition to the risks identified in item 2 above relating to handling a client's funds, note that an expansive interpretation of this "specified activity" would conceivably cover financing and refinancing transactions.

5. Creation, operation, or management of legal persons or arrangements, and buying and selling of business entities. The Lawyer Guidance does not define "creation, operation, or management of legal persons or arrangements, and buying and selling of business entities."²² It is under item 5 that the widest range of transactional lawyers fall within the "specified activities." This category of Specified Activities appears to include most of the routine work that is done by real estate lawyers, corporate and business lawyers, and trust and estates lawyers. As in all cases, lawyers must evaluate the risks to determine the extent of CDD required. Even lawyers who do nothing more than prepare for or carry out the task of forming legal entities are likely to be subject to the Lawyer Guidance under this criterion.

Practice pointer: The following is an example of the creation of business entities used for money laundering. Mr. S headed an organization importing narcotics into country A from country B. Mr. S employed a lawyer to establish a web of off-shore corporate entities through which Mr. S could launder proceeds of a narcotics importing operation. These entities were incorporated in Country C where there was lax scrutiny of ownership, records, and finances. A local management company in Country D administered these companies. These entities were used to camouflage movement of illicit funds, acquisition of assets, and financing criminal activities. Mr. S was the holder of 100% of the bearer share capital (i.e., bearer shares are negotiable instruments that accord ownership in a corporation to the person who possess the bearer share certificate) of these off-shore entities. In Country A, a distinct group of entities without any apparent association to Mr. S transferred large amounts of money to Country D where it was deposited in, or transited through, Mr. S's offshore companies. This same web network was found to have been used to transfer large amounts of money to a person in Country E who was later found to be responsible for drug shipments destined for Country A.²³

In July 2009, the Uniform Law Commissioners adopted a uniform act known as the Uniform Law Enforcement Access to Entity Information Act that would in certain circumstances ensure transparency and disclosures to law enforcement authorities of the ownership of various legal entities. Representatives of the U.S. Department of Treasury participated in drafting the uniform act. Legislation is also currently pending in Congress dealing with this issue.

Practice pointer: Lawyers engaged in the performance of these legal tasks should satisfy themselves that, at a minimum, they have performed the basic CDD measures described previously (unless the client is otherwise exempt as described in this paper).

What are the risk categories?

The Lawyer Guidance identifies three major risk categories with regard to legal engagements: (a) country/geographic risk, (b) service risk, and (c) client risk. Lawyers need to determine their exposure to each of these risk categories. The relative weight to be given to each risk category in assessing the overall risk of money laundering and terrorist financing will vary from one lawyer or firm to another because of the size, sophistication, location, and nature and scope of services offered by the lawyer or the firm. Based on their individual practices and judgments, lawyers will need to assess independently the weight to be given to each risk factor. These risk factors are subject to variables that may increase or decrease the perceived risk posed by a particular client or type of work. This section will discuss the risk factors and Section 4 will highlight in detail the risk variables that affect each of the risk factors.

Practice pointer: The risk profile of a lawyer or firm whose practice is limited to domestic clients and transactions differs from the risk profile of a lawyer or firm that engages in international and cross-border transactions. The risk factors are intended to attune the lawyer to these differences so as to enable the lawyer to design and implement a risk-based approach that is tailored to that specific, and unique, practice profile.

1. Country/Geographic Risk

The Lawyer Guidance notes the absence of a universally adopted listing of countries or geographic areas that are deemed to present a lower or higher risk. The client's domicile, the location of the transaction, and the source of the funding are but a few sources from which a money laundering risk can arise.

The Lawyer Guidance does, however, identify the profile of those countries that in FATF's view pose a higher risk of money laundering. These higher risk countries include those that are subject to sanctions, embargoes, or similar measures issued by certain bodies, such as the United Nations and those identified by credible sources as having significant levels of corruption or other criminal activity or a location from which funds or support are provided to terrorist organizations. Countries are also considered to pose a higher risk of money laundering when credible sources identify those countries as generally lacking appropriate AML/CFT laws, regulations, and other measures. The Lawyer Guidance defines “credible sources” as information that is produced by well-known bodies that generally are regarded as reputable and that make such information publicly and widely available. Examples of credible sources include FATF, the International Monetary Fund, The World Bank, FinCEN, OFAC, and the U.S. Department of State.²⁴

Practice pointers:

- Most U.S. lawyers deal only with clients and parties located exclusively within the United States. The country/geographic risk should thus not present a meaningful risk in most transactions.
- In assessing the country risk, a lawyer needs to take into account the client’s domicile, the location of the transaction, and the source of the funding.
- A lawyer representing a client who is involved in acquiring a non-U.S. business that has operations in, or has business with, a country subject to a United Nations embargo or a U.S. government sanctions program (e.g., Zimbabwe, Sudan, and Iran) should understand that the transaction represents a higher risk based on the geographic location and activities of the business being acquired. The lawyer also should determine during the initial client intake efforts whether the lawyer, as a U.S. person, is authorized to participate in the representation because U.S. sanctions programs generally prohibit U.S. persons from engaging in most transactions with persons in Zimbabwe, Sudan, and Iran.
- Transparency International, a global civil society organization formed to fight corruption, has developed a jurisdiction-specific corruption perceptions index that ranks countries based on the degree to which corruption is perceived to exist among public officials and politicians. See http://www.transparency.org/policy_research/surveys_indices/cpi/2007/faq#general1. This website may be a useful resource in assessing the level of corruption in a specific country. Another useful resource is the individual Country Reports prepared

2. Client Risk

A critical component to the development and implementation of an overall risk-based framework is determining the potential money laundering or terrorist financing risk posed by a client. Clients range from individuals, partnerships and limited liability companies with dozens of partners or members to multi-national corporations. Given this spectrum of clients, a lawyer will be challenged to determine whether a particular client poses a higher risk and, if so, the level of that risk and whether the application of any mitigating factors influences that assessment. The Lawyer Guidance identifies various categories of higher risk clients. If a client falls into one of these categories, the lawyer is then required to apply a set of risk variables that may mitigate or exacerbate the risk assessment the lawyer is required to make to determine the necessary level of CDD.

The Lawyer Guidance identifies nearly a dozen categories of potentially higher risk clients.²⁵ Lawyers need to determine whether any of their clients fall into one or more of these categories and therefore warrant an evaluation of any mitigating circumstances and increased risk assessment. These categories are as follows:

- 2.1 Politically Exposed Persons. Politically exposed persons (“PEPs”) are individuals who are or have been entrusted with prominent functions in a foreign country. Examples include heads of state or of government, senior politicians, senior government, judicial, or military officials, senior executives of state owned corporations, or important political party officials. PEPs do not include middle ranking or more junior individuals in the foregoing categories. If a lawyer is advising a client that is a PEP or is beneficially owned by the PEP, the lawyer would have to perform a higher and more exacting form of CDD known as “enhanced CDD.” The extent and nature of the enhanced CDD will depend on the relevant factors, such as the PEP’s home country, the type of work the PEP is instructing the lawyer to perform or carry out, and the scrutiny to which the PEP is subjected in the PEP’s home country.

Practice pointers:

- It is important to note that PEPs are high level political officials in foreign countries. For example, a senior U.S. government official would not be a PEP vis-à-vis a U.S. lawyer. By contrast, a U.S. lawyer representing a high level government official of a foreign country would be representing a PEP for purposes of the Lawyer Guidance.

- FATF identified a typology where a senior politician and a senior official were involved in high level corruption. An intermediary received a payment of USD 50 million from Company A. The intermediary then transferred the money into two accounts held off-shore; the funds were then moved to company accounts that were also held offshore. The beneficial owners of these company accounts were discovered to be a former head of the secret service in Country B and a state secretary for the Ministry of Defence in Country C.²⁶

2.2 Unusual Activity. Clients conducting their relationship or requesting services in unusual or unconventional circumstances (as evaluated in light of all the circumstances of the representation).²⁷

Practice pointer: This broad category, which is viewed through the prism of the overall representation, includes a client's inexplicable demand to close a purchase or sale in an extremely short period of time or the client's refusal to provide the lawyer with any details about the client. Similarly, a client who insists that a lawyer who does not usually handle cross-border transactions assume responsibility in an international business transaction should raise suspicions.

2.3 Masking of Beneficial Ownership. Where the structure or nature of the client entity or relationship makes it difficult to identify in a timely manner the true beneficial owner or controlling interests, such as the unexplained or seemingly unnecessary use of legal persons or legal arrangements, nominee shares or bearer shares.²⁸

Practice pointer: This might be typified by a client, particularly a new client, who insists on the formation of a complex, multi-tiered entity (such as a limited liability partnership, corporation, or limited liability company) involving other entities and a notable absence of any individuals and offers only the briefest of explanations or no justification for or explanation as to the purpose or the ownership structure of the new entity.

²⁶ See Case 15, REPORT ON MONEY LAUNDERING TYPOLOGIES 2003-2004, Financial Action Task Force, <http://www.fatf-gafi.org/dataoecd/19/11/33624379.PDF>.

²⁷ Id. (third bullet).

²⁸ Id. (fourth bullet).

- 2.4 Cash Intensive Businesses. Clients that are cash (and cash equivalent) intensive businesses, such as: (a) money services businesses (e.g., remittance houses, currency exchange houses, or other businesses offering money transfer facilities), (b) casinos, betting and other gambling related activities, and (c) businesses that while not normally cash intensive, generate substantial amounts of cash.²⁹

Practice pointer: Lawyers need to be especially sensitive to cash intensive businesses, such as residential rental operations. Money launderers have been known to use bars, restaurants, car washes, and parking lots – all legitimate enterprises, but cash intensive. Indeed, money launderers have sought to launder funds through collection plates at churches.

- 2.5 Cash Intensive Businesses—Mitigation of Risk. Where clients are cash intensive businesses that are already themselves subject to and regulated for a full range of AML/CFT requirements consistent with the 40+9 Recommendations, this may mitigate the client risks to the lawyer.³⁰
- 2.6 Charities and NPOs. Charities and other NPOs that are not subject to monitoring or supervision (especially those operating on a “cross-border” basis) by designated competent authorities or self-regulatory organizations (“SROs”) are potentially higher risk clients.³¹

Practice pointer: A lawyer should carefully scrutinize a charity that has raised funds domestically and then disbursed them abroad, no matter what may appear on the surface to be its charitable cause or mission. When dealing with a charity/NPO, a lawyer may consider it appropriate to assess whether the policies and procedures of the charity/NPO comply with the guidelines set forth in U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY ANTI-TERRORIST FINANCING GUIDELINES: VOLUNTARY BEST PRACTICES FOR U.S. BASED CHARITIES, <http://www.ustreas.gov-press-releases-reports->

- 2.7 Financial Intermediaries Not Subject to Adequate AML/CFT Laws. Clients using financial intermediaries, financial institutions or legal professionals that are not subject to adequate AML/CFT laws and measures and that are not adequately supervised by competent authorities or SROs are potentially higher risk clients.³²

Practice pointer: Almost all domestic U.S. financial institutions are covered by AML/CFT rules that apply to them. Perhaps the greatest risks here are (i) a transaction with an unregulated financial institution or (ii) a transaction involving a foreign financial institution not subject to AML/CFT rules.

- 2.8 Clients with Certain Criminal Convictions. Clients having convictions for proceeds generating crimes who instruct the lawyer (who has actual knowledge of such convictions) to undertake specified activities on their behalf are potentially higher risk clients.³³

Practice pointer: Lawyers who deal with clients knowing that they have been convicted of financial crimes (such as embezzlement) present a potentially higher client risk to the lawyer.

- 2.9 Clients with No Address/Multiple Addresses. Clients who have no address, or multiple addresses without legitimate reasons.³⁴

Practice pointer: This risk factor informs the issue of the client's true identity. A client with no address or multiple addresses without a legitimate explanation is a higher risk to the lawyer. A higher risk situation may also arise where a client operates seemingly unrelated and different businesses at the same address.

- 2.10 Unexplained Change in Instructions. Clients who change their settlement or execution instructions without appropriate explanation are potentially higher risk clients.³⁵

³² Id. (eighth bullet).

³³ Id. (ninth bullet).

³⁴ Id. (tenth bullet).

³⁵ Id. (eleventh bullet).

Practice pointer: The most likely instructions to raise concerns are those given in connection with the receipt of funds (source of funds) or the delivery of funds (the recipient of funds), including those involving last minute and unexplained changes in the flow of funds or instructions directing that the funds be sent to a person or entity unrelated to the transaction.

- 2.11 Structures With No Legal Purpose. The use of legal persons and arrangements without any apparent legal or legitimate tax, business, economic or other reason are potentially higher risk situations.³⁶

Practice pointer: This high risk factor requires the lawyer to determine whether there is any apparent legal or legitimate tax, business, economic or other reason for the use of a particular legal entity or transaction structure. Obviously, a lawyer cannot knowingly facilitate criminal activity by creating deal structures whose only purpose is to mask money laundering or terrorist financing. The lawyer needs to evaluate whether the use of particular entities or deal structures advances a legal or legitimate tax, business, economic or other reason. A client who is unwilling to explain the rationale for the use of particular entities or deal structures would require the lawyer to intensify his or her CDD.

3. Service Risk

FATF has determined that some services are at higher risk for money laundering and terrorist financing. Typically those services involve the movement of funds and/or the concealment of beneficial ownership.

- 3.1 “Touching the Money” Test. Services where lawyers, acting as financial intermediaries, actually handle the receipt and transmission of funds through accounts the lawyers actually control in the act of closing or facilitating a transaction.³⁷ Without knowing the sources and destination of the funds, a lawyer may unwittingly aid money laundering or terrorist financing activities.

Practice pointers:

- This service risk factor is the classic “touch the money”

³⁶ Id. (twelfth bullet).

³⁷ LAWYER GUIDANCE ¶ 110 (first bullet).

factor. If a lawyer handles (or “touches”) money in performing or carrying out a Specified Activity or if cash moves through the lawyer’s client account, that lawyer is exposed to a higher risk of being unknowingly involved in money laundering or terrorist financing activity. For example, a real estate lawyer who represents a seller of commercial real estate may also function as an escrow agent who holds the earnest money deposit in an escrow account and conducts closing by receiving and transmitting the closing funds through the lawyer’s escrow account.

- Trust and estate lawyers frequently “touch the money,” for example, in the process of funding a trust or in administering an estate. Risk thus exists at the point of funding the trust and thereafter in the administration of the trust.
- The lawyer should be aware of not only the source of funds transferred to a trust but the use of the funds by the trustee. The lawyer should be alert to the purpose of the trust, the reasons behind any unusual structures, and the use of jurisdictions that have minimal compliance with AML/CFT regulation.

3.2 Concealment of Beneficial Ownership. Services to conceal improperly beneficial ownership from competent authorities.³⁸

Practice pointer: Anonymity, or the lack of transparency, is disfavored by criminal enforcement authorities. However, there may be legitimate reasons to keep confidential the beneficial ownership of an entity from the public because of business competitive reasons. For example, a developer may desire to acquire multiple tracts of land. If the developer discloses the identity of its beneficial owners, landowners may force the developer (with perceived “deep pockets”) to pay a higher price for the tracts being sold. By keeping the identity of its beneficial owners out of the public record, the developer may be able to acquire the tracts at fair market value without paying a premium. Non-business reasons for confidentiality may apply as well. For instance, a wealthy investor may desire anonymity to enhance personal safety (e.g., avoid kidnappings). Lawyers should be mindful, though, that law enforcement authorities may have a legitimate need to know the identity of the true beneficial owner in appropriate circumstances, such as bona fide criminal investigations.

- 3.3 Performing Services Outside Area of Expertise. Services requested by the client for which the client knows the lawyer does not have expertise excepting where the lawyer is referring the request to an appropriately trained professional for advice.³⁹

Practice pointer: A lawyer regularly represents a client in commercial real estate transactions. The client asks the lawyer to handle the creation of various off-shore trusts. The client is aware that the lawyer has no training in creating these types of trusts. The lawyer should inquire why the client would like the lawyer, and not that lawyer's colleagues who are experienced in trusts, to handle this work.

- 3.4 Accelerated Real Estate Transfers. Transfer of real estate between parties in a time period that is unusually short for similar transactions with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason.⁴⁰

Practice pointers:

- Accelerated, or frequent, transfers or “flips” of real property may be accomplished for specific tax or other business reasons. But real property transfers made in an unusually short time frame in comparison to similar deals and with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason represent a higher risk to the lawyer. For example, a client asks the lawyer to handle the transfer of a residence from the client to a new entity controlled by the client. The client then directs the lawyer to convey the property immediately from the new entity to yet another new entity controlled by the client. The lawyer needs to understand the legal, tax, business, economic, or other legitimate reason for the serial transactions within a compressed time period.
- In a 2008 report, FinCEN noted that a bank reported a series of transactions occurring within a one-month period in which the same property was bought and sold among related individuals. As a result of this flipping of the property, the bank granted a loan re-finance of over $600,000 to an individual who did not hold title to the property at the time the loan closed. The bank indicated in the suspicious activity report narrative that it was not able to definitively determine the motive for these transactions, but surmised that they may have been conducted to promote money laundering or tax evasion.⁴¹

³⁹ Id. (third bullet).

⁴⁰ Id. (fourth bullet).

- 3.5 Cash Payments; Payments From Other Sources. Payments received from unassociated or unknown third parties and payments for fees in cash where this would not be a typical method of payment.⁴²

Practice pointer: If a client offers to pay in cash, the lawyer is dealing with a higher risk situation. For payments from third parties, the lawyer should always understand the reason for that arrangement. The lawyer should be aware of the requirement that each person engaged in a trade or business who, in the course of that trade or business, receives more than $10,000 in cash in one transaction or in two or more related transactions, must file Form 8300 with the Internal Revenue Service.

- 3.6 Inadequate Consideration. Transactions where it is readily apparent to the lawyer that there is inadequate consideration, such as when the client does not identify legitimate reasons for the amount of the consideration.⁴³

Practice pointer: In assessing the adequacy of consideration, a lawyer is not required to undertake a rigorous analysis of the economics of the transaction. Rather, the lawyer simply needs to understand whether the stated consideration is reasonably related to the value of the transaction after factoring in the known relevant criteria. For instance, a client proposes to sell a parcel of land valued at $1 million to a third party for $20,000. On its face, the disparity between the value of the land and the stated consideration should prompt the lawyer to inquire into the justification for the disparity in consideration. Inadequate consideration is typically not a risk factor in the practice of estate planning where clients are routinely making gifts to spouses, children, other family members and charities.

- 3.7 Estate Administration—Convictions for Proceeds Generating Crimes. Administrative arrangements concerning estates where the decedent was known to the lawyer to be a person who had been convicted of proceeds generating crimes.⁴⁴

Practice pointer: If the decedent was involved or even reputed to have been involved in criminal activity, then the lawyer is dealing with a higher risk situation. A lawyer should assume a higher level of risk if the decedent was involved in any of the following businesses: casinos, bars, strip clubs, or dealers in pornography. Although these businesses are not necessarily illegal, they involve sufficient indicia of criminal elements being associated with such businesses that the assumption of higher risk is warranted.

- 3.8 Extraordinary Legal Fees. Clients who offer to pay extraordinary fees for services which would not ordinarily warrant such a premium. Bona fide and appropriate contingency fee arrangements, where a lawyer may receive a significant premium for a successful representation, should not be considered a risk factor.⁴⁵

Practice pointer: If the client offers to pay the lawyer a percent of the proceeds for a sale where the client wants the closing to be quick and anonymous, a lawyer should view this as a higher risk situation.

- 3.9 Source of Funds/Wealth. The source of funds and the source of wealth. The source of funds is the activity that generates the funds for a client, while the source of wealth describes the activities that have generated the total net worth of a client.⁴⁶

Practice pointer: Most clients can quickly inform a lawyer of how they made or acquired their wealth. A lawyer can usually verify easily such representations by references, a review of the clients' income tax returns (but only to the extent the client has provided the lawyer with this information), or Internet research. A higher risk situation may arise if the client is unable or unwilling to identify the source of wealth.

⁴⁴ Id. (seventh bullet).

⁴⁵ Id. (eighth bullet).

⁴⁶ Id. (ninth bullet).

- 3.10 Out of Character Transactions. Unusually high levels of assets or unusually large transactions compared to what might reasonably be expected of clients with a similar profile may indicate that a client not otherwise seen as higher risk should be treated as such. Conversely, low levels of assets or low value transactions involving a client that would otherwise appear to be higher risk might allow the lawyer to treat the client as lower risk.⁴⁷

Practice pointer: This risk factor focuses on transactions that appear out of character for a particular client because of the size of the transactions or assets. For example, a lawyer represents a client who typically buys tracts of land for development, and the average size of these transactions is approximately $500,000. The client/developer asks the lawyer to handle the acquisition of an operating business unrelated to the client's real estate development business for a purchase price of $6 million. In this case, the lawyer should inquire into the client's historical acquisition practices and why this client now appears to be engaged in transactions that are out of character.

- 3.11 Shell Companies. Shell companies, companies with ownership through nominee shareholding and control through nominee and corporate directors.⁴⁸

Practice pointer: These are the kinds of structures typically used to conceal beneficial ownership. The risk is higher when such entities are being utilized.

- 3.12 Hard to Identify Trust Beneficiaries. Situations where it is difficult to identify the beneficiaries of trusts; this might include a discretionary trust that gives the trustee discretionary power to name the beneficiary within a class of beneficiaries and distribute accordingly the assets held in trust, and when a trust is set up for the purpose of managing shares in ⁴⁷ Id. (tenth bullet).

⁴⁸ Id. (eleventh bullet).

a company that can make it more difficult to determine the ownership of the company managed by the trust.⁴⁹

Practice pointer: Typically trust beneficiaries are obvious. In any situation where they are not, the risk is higher. Sometimes trusts are used to conceal beneficial ownership, but there is no reason that the beneficial owners should not be disclosed to the lawyer so the lawyer can make an assessment of the risk based on that knowledge.

- 3.13 Anonymity. Services that deliberately have provided or purposely depend upon more anonymity in the client identity or participants than is normal under the circumstances and in the experience of the lawyer.⁵⁰

Practice pointer: As described in a previous Practice Pointer, a developer assembling multiple parcels may have a legitimate need to anonymity and, in that case, anonymity is not by itself a higher risk factor.

- 3.14 Trust Services. Firms that, as a separate business, offer TCSP services should look to the TCSP Guidance, even if those firms are owned or operated by lawyers. Lawyers, however, who offer TCSP services should look to the Lawyer Guidance, but those lawyers should also consider the customer or service risks related to TCSPs, such as the following: (a) unexplained use of express trusts, (b) unexplained delegation of authority by the client through the use of powers of attorney, mixed boards and representative offices, (c) in the case of express trusts, an unexplained relationship between a settlor and beneficiaries with a vested right, other beneficiaries and persons who are the object of a power, (d) in the case of an express trust, an unexplained (where explanation is warranted) nature of classes of beneficiaries and classes within an expression of wishes.⁵¹

Practice pointers:

- In the usual case a trust lawyer will know immediately if the trust arrangement has odd or unusual characteristics. Even then, some of these features may be easily explained by the client, but such factors may be a sign of a higher risk situation.

⁴⁹ Id. (twelfth bullet).

⁵⁰ Id. (thirteenth bullet).

⁵¹ Id. (fourteenth bullet).

- In performing trustee services the lawyer will almost certainly be “touching the money” and so that service risk is higher.

4. Risk Variables that May Affect Risk

The Lawyer Guidance recognizes that vast and profound differences exist within lawyers and the nature of their practices, types of clients, size of firms, scale, and expertise. All lawyers and law firms are not the same. For that reason, when creating a reasonable risk-based approach and evaluating the resources that can be reasonably allocated to implement and manage it, due consideration must be given to these factors. The Lawyer Guidance notes that a sole practitioner would not be expected to devote an equivalent level of resources as a large law firm. Instead, the sole practitioner would need to develop appropriate systems and controls and a risk-based approach proportionate to the scope and nature of the practitioner’s practice.

A lawyer needs to consider whether the client and the proposed work would be unusual, risky, or suspicious. This significant factor must always be considered in the context of the lawyer’s practice. The risk-based approach and its concept of proportionality dictates that the presence or absence of one or more of these variables may require a lawyer to perform enhanced due diligence or lead the lawyer to conclude that standard CDD can be reduced. As noted earlier, in no case does FATF suggest that the risk may ever be so low as to eliminate any form or level of CDD. This approach is best viewed as a sliding scale where one or more of the following variable factors may increase or decrease the perceived risk posed by a particular client or type of work.

- 4.1 Nature of Client Relationship. The nature of the client relationship and the client’s need for the lawyer to provide specified activities.⁵²

Practice pointers:

- If the lawyer has been regularly representing the client for several years in performing and carrying out one or more Specified Activities, the client’s request that the lawyer perform the same or similar work for another similar transaction suggests that the risk of money laundering or terrorist financing is low. In this situation, it would be disproportionate to perform standard CDD; rather, reduced CDD would be warranted and the focus should be on the transaction involved.

⁵² LAWYER GUIDANCE ¶ 112 (first bullet).

- Reduced CDD may simply entail confirming the on-going accuracy of the client information.
- The type of client influences the scope, level, and intensity of the CDD. Lawyers should thus determine the type of entity involved, such as whether the client is a natural person or a legal entity. If the client is a legal entity, is the client privately held or publicly traded? Is the client subject to AML/CFT regulations or other form of governmental oversight and regulation? If the client is a legal entity, who is acting on behalf of the client in directing the performance of the Specified Activities?

4.2 Existing Regulation. The level of regulation or other oversight or governance regime to which a client is subject.⁵³

Practice pointer: A client that is a financial institution or legal professional regulated in a country with a satisfactory AML/CFT regime poses less risk of money laundering than a client in an industry that has money laundering risks and yet is unregulated for money laundering purposes.

4.3 Reputation and Publicly Available Information. The reputation and publicly available information about a client. Clients that are transparent and well known in the public domain and have operated for a number of years without being convicted of proceeds generating crimes may have low susceptibility to money laundering.⁵⁴

Practice pointer: A client has been operating a family owned business in the same location for several generations. The client has an excellent reputation in the community and is active in various community organizations. In this example, the client can be viewed as having a low susceptibility to money laundering. By contrast, a client has just relocated to a distant geographic location and has not had an opportunity to establish the client's reputation. The client is publicity shy and there appears to be no publicly available information about the client. The lawyer does not know the criminal background of the client. In that situation, the lawyer should perform standard CDD unless other risk factors suggest that enhanced CDD should be performed.

⁵³ Id. (second bullet).

⁵⁴ Id. (third bullet).

- 4.4 Regularity/Duration of Relationship. The regularity or duration of the relationship.⁵⁵

Practice pointer: The regularity and duration of the attorney-client relationship influences the level of CDD. A lawyer who has been regularly representing a client for several decades would have no need to perform standard or enhanced CDD. Reduced CDD would be warranted in that situation. By contrast, a lawyer who has represented a client for several decades but only deals with the client once or twice every five years should perform standard CDD given the lack of regular, on-going interaction with the client.

- 4.5 Familiarity with Country/Laws. The familiarity of the lawyer with a country, including knowledge of local laws, regulations and rules, as well as the structure and extent of regulatory oversight, as the result of a legal professional's own activities within the country.⁵⁶

Practice pointer: This likely is only going to be an issue for lawyers who practice cross-border work. Even then this requested service may not be a higher risk situation. For example, in dealing with a country that has stringent AML/CFT laws (such as the United Kingdom), the risk might be lower than when dealing with Liechtenstein. In dealing with Liechtenstein or another small financial center jurisdiction, the frequency of the transactions and the knowledge about the reputation of one's professional counterpart can affect the risk assessment.

- 4.6 Duration/Magnitude of Lawyer-Client Relationship. The proportionality between the magnitude or volume and longevity of the client's business and its use of the lawyer for its legal requirements, including the nature of professional services sought.⁵⁷ This factor focuses on the duration and magnitude of the lawyer-client relationship.
- 4.7 Local Counsel. Subject to other factors (including the nature of the services and the source and nature of the client relationship), providing limited legal services in the capacity of a local or special counsel may be considered a low risk factor. This may also, in any event, mean that the lawyer is not “preparing for” or “carrying out” a transaction for a regulated activity specified in Recommendation 12.⁵⁸

⁵⁵ Id. (fourth bullet).

⁵⁶ Id. (fifth bullet).

⁵⁷ Id. (sixth bullet).

Practice pointer: The local or special counsel’s experience and relationship with referring counsel can have a significant impact on risk. If the referring counsel is well known and has a good reputation for ethics and professionalism, the risk is lower than if the referring counsel is not known or does not enjoy a good reputation.

- 4.8 Geographic Disparity. Significant and unexplained geographic distance between the lawyer and the location of the client where there is no nexus to the type of work being undertaken.⁵⁹

Practice pointer: If a California client asks a Florida lawyer to form a Nevada limited liability company or corporation, the client’s request may call for a higher risk assessment.

- 4.9 “One Shot” Transaction. Where a prospective client has instructed the lawyer to undertake a single transaction-based service (as opposed to an ongoing advisory relationship) and one or more other risk factors are present.⁶⁰

Practice pointer: If the entire scope of representation of a new client is to form a limited liability company for the client to receive the proceeds of a sale, the narrowness of the representation may pose a higher risk factor.

- 4.10 Technological Developments Favoring Anonymity. Risks that may arise from the use of new or developing technologies that permit non-face to face relationships and could favour or promote anonymity. However, due to the prevalence of electronic communication between lawyers and clients in the delivery of legal services, non-face to face interaction between lawyers and clients should not, standing alone, be considered a high risk factor. For example, non-face to face, cross-border work for an existing client is not necessarily high risk work for certain organisations

⁵⁸ Id. (seventh bullet).

⁵⁹ Id. (eighth bullet).

⁶⁰ Id. (ninth bullet).

(such as regional, national or international law firms or other firms, regardless of size, that specialize in that type of work).⁶¹

Practice pointer: It is not unusual for lawyers and clients, who have never met in person, to deal and interact with each other via e-mail and voicemail messages. This should not, standing alone, constitute a high risk factor.

4.11 Client Origination/Referral Source. The nature of the referral or origination of the client relationship.⁶²

Practice pointer: A prospective client may contact a legal professional in an unsolicited manner or without common or customary methods of introduction or referrals, which may increase risk. By contrast, where a prospective client has been referred from another trusted source subject to an AML/CFT regime that is in line with the FATF standards, the referral may be considered a mitigating risk factor.

4.12 Structure of Client/Transaction. The structure of a client or transaction.⁶³

Practice pointer: Structures with no apparent legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reason may increase risk. Legal professionals often design structures (even if complex) for legitimate legal, tax, business, economic or other legitimate reasons. In those cases, the structure used is not a high risk factor.

4.13 Pension Funds. Trusts that are pensions may be considered lower risk.⁶⁴

5. Controls for Higher Risk Clients

An assessment of the applicable risk factors may lead to the conclusion that the client may be higher risk. The Lawyer Guidance does not prohibit a lawyer from representing a higher risk client; instead, the Lawyer Guidance directs the lawyer to implement appropriate measures and controls to mitigate the potential money laundering and terrorist financing risks of that client. Lawyers and appropriate staff need to be trained to identify and detect changes in client activity by reference to risk-based criteria. The measures and controls for higher risk clients may include the following:

⁶² Id. (eleventh bullet).

⁶³ Id. (twelfth bullet).

⁶⁴ Id. (thirteenth bullet).

- 5.1 General Training. It is paramount that general training be made available to lawyers and appropriate staff on money laundering methods and risks relevant to lawyers.⁶⁵
- 5.2 Specific Training. Targeted training for increased awareness by the lawyers providing Specified Activities to higher risk clients or to lawyers undertaking higher risk work. The key is to ensure that those lawyers who will be exposed to the higher risk work be specifically trained so that they are attuned to the applicable risks.⁶⁶
- 5.3 Enhanced Due Diligence. Enhanced levels of CDD for higher risk situations (see section 6.3 below for a more detailed discussion).⁶⁷
- 5.4 Peer/Managerial Oversight. Enhanced or additional review and/or consultation by the lawyer or within a firm at the establishment of a relationship. Peer or managerial review and oversight are important measures to take when dealing with higher risk clients. Additional review may detect other risk factors or may reveal factors that mitigate the risk. In larger firms, various management levels or committees may review these types of engagements with close scrutiny. At smaller firms, these types of formal controls may not be feasible or practical, but the lawyer should nonetheless seek additional review when exploring an engagement with a higher risk client.⁶⁸
- 5.5 Evolving Evaluation of Services. Periodic review of the services offered by the lawyer and/or firm to determine whether the risk of money laundering and terrorist financing occurring has increased. Services offered by a lawyer may, over time, become more susceptible to money laundering and terrorist financing. Lawyers should periodically review their services to see if the risks of money laundering and terrorist financing occurring have increased.⁶⁹

Practice pointer: If a lawyer's practice evolves from domestic work to international work, the service risk may possibly increase. Similarly, if a lawyer's practice results in an increased use of the firm's trust account (client account), service risk may increase. Another example of increased risk is when a lawyer's client base involves over time the increasing use of more entities or more tiered entity structures.

- 5.6 On-Going/Evolving Evaluation of Clients. Reviewing client relationships from time to time to determine whether the risk of money laundering and terrorist financing occurring has increased. Clients may enter into new businesses or affiliate with other investors, all of which may increase the risk of money laundering and terrorist financing. Lawyers should be attuned to their client relationships to detect whether the risk of money laundering and terrorist financing occurring has increased.⁷⁰
- 5.7 Overlap. The same measures and controls may often address more than one of the risk criteria identified, and it is not necessarily expected that a legal professional establish specific controls targeting each risk criterion. Lawyers may adopt measures and controls that address multiple risk factors. For that reason, lawyers are not required to mechanically apply a specific measure or control to each risk criterion.⁷¹

6. Basic Protocol for Client Intake and Assessment

The fundamental starting point for implementing a risk-based approach is for the lawyer to make an overall risk assessment of the client. Most lawyers perform elements of that assessment as part of their established client intake and conflicts review system. The protocols outlined in this Section 6 and in Appendix A attached hereto are designed to supplement, not supplant, that system. The complexity of that system will vary depending on the practice profile of the lawyer and the firm.

In making an overall risk assessment of the client, the lawyer needs to take into account any appropriate risk variables (and any mitigating factors) before making a final determination to accept the engagement. The lawyer's risk assessment, which is made on an individualized basis for each client, will then dictate the overall approach to CDD requirements and appropriate verification. The lawyer determines which CDD requirements are appropriate for each client based on the overall risk assessment and the lawyer's familiarity with the client. These CDD requirements may include the following:

⁷⁰ Id. (sixth bullet).

⁷¹ Id. (seventh bullet).

6.1 Standard Level of CDD. A standard level of CDD is generally applied to all clients. Standard level CDD includes the following elements:

6.1.1 Identifying the client and verifying that client's identity using reliable, independent source documents, data, or information. The lawyer needs to document its findings.

- Basic Identification. Client identification may entail a review of the client's driver's license or other governmentally-issued photographic identification, the verification of the client's address, and a check of the client's financial and business references.
- OFAC Scan. A basic part of the verification process includes performing an "OFAC scan" to determine whether the client's name appears on the SDN List or business with the client is otherwise prohibited. The SDN List identifies a list of persons (individuals and entities) with whom U.S. persons may not engage in the exchange of most goods, services, or technology. U.S. persons are also prohibited from engaging in the exchange of most goods, services, or technology with (a) persons owned 50% or more by persons on the SDN list; and (b) persons in or the governments of Cuba,⁷² Sudan, and Iran. Helpful information on performing OFAC scans and dealing with the results of that effort are set forth in OFAC's website: <http://www.treas.gov/offices/enforcement/ofac/>.

6.1.2 Identifying the beneficial owner, and taking reasonable measures to verify the identity of the beneficial owner of the client such that the lawyer is reasonably satisfied that the lawyer knows who the beneficial owner is.

Practice pointer: The verification of the identity of beneficial ownership is risk-based. Lawyers should evaluate the risks of not verifying the identity of the beneficial owners of a client. Law firms should consider developing or revising their intake forms to capture this information.

6.1.3 Obtaining information on the purpose and intended nature of the business relationship.

⁷² For purposes of the Cuban Assets Control Regulations, Cuban nationals located outside of the United States are also prohibited parties.

6.1.4 Conducting ongoing due diligence on the business relationship and scrutiny of transactions undertaken periodically throughout the course of that relationship to ensure that the transactions being conducted are consistent with the lawyer's knowledge of the client, its business and risk profile, including, where necessary, the source of funds.

Practice pointer: Client due diligence is not a static analysis. The attorney-client relationship often evolves over time, and the lawyer needs to be sensitive to changes that may occur during the course of the relationship.

6.2 Reduced CDD. A lawyer can apply a reduced level of CDD in recognized lower risk scenarios, such as: (a) publicly listed companies (and their majority owned subsidiaries), (b) financial institutions subject to an AML/CFT regime consistent with the FATF Recommendations (all U.S. banks are subject to an AML/CFT regime), and (c) government authorities and state run enterprises (other than those from sanctioned countries). Reduced CDD may simply include obtaining information on the purpose and intended nature of the new matter or business relationship, which information is necessary to perform the engagement.

Practice pointer: Lawyers do not need to perform standard CDD for clients that are publicly listed companies. These companies present a recognized lower risk profile than other clients. The lawyers will need to know the purpose and nature of the new matter or business relationship.

6.3 Enhanced CDD. An enhanced level of CDD is required for those clients that are reasonably determined by the lawyer to be of higher risk. An assessment of higher risk may be based on a number of factors, such as the client's business activity, ownership structure, particular service offered including work involving higher risk countries or defined by applicable law or regulation as posing higher risk, such as the risks outlined in paragraphs 108-109 of the Lawyer Guidance (geographic risk and customer risk). Enhanced CDD means a more in depth, systematic inquiry into the client and its ownership and business activities.

Practice pointer: Higher risk clients require enhanced CDD. The lawyer needs to ensure that the client and its ownership and business activities comply with applicable law and that no criminal activity is involved.

- 6.4 Timing. The overall risk assessment should be performed as part of the client intake and conflict review process, meaning that the lawyer should refrain from performing the work until the completion of the risk assessment process. In those situations where the verification process may be time consuming, the lawyer may determine to cease work on a matter if the overall risk assessment is not completed within a defined time period after the work begins.

What if Client Presents an Unacceptable Risk?

Not every risk-based approach analysis of a potential client will inexorably lead to the conclusion that, with appropriate controls, the lawyer can accept and proceed with the proposed engagement. It may be possible that the lawyer's analysis will lead the lawyer to reject the engagement or to withdraw from the representation. Rule 1.16 of the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct governs declining or terminating the lawyer-client relationship. When faced with a situation where the lawyer is compelled to decline or terminate the relationship, the lawyer should comply with the requirements of the applicable rules of professional conduct, including Model Rule 1.16 or its equivalent. For example, a lawyer may withdraw from representing a client if, among other things, the client persists in a course of action involving the lawyer's services that the lawyer reasonably believes is criminal or fraudulent or the client has used the lawyer's services to perpetrate a crime or fraud.

Education and Continuing Legal Education Efforts

The Lawyer Guidance places a premium on on-going educational efforts to enhance awareness of money laundering and terrorist financing risks.⁷³ Once the lawyer or law firm has assimilated the basics of the risk-based approach, a decision needs to be made about how to implement policies and procedures firm wide. At a minimum the lawyer or law firm needs to implement an AML/CFT policy and procedures for client intake and the periodic review of clients' activities. The lawyer or law firm should designate a compliance officer. All lawyers in the firm will need a certain level of training and education as will paralegals and key administrative staff. The policies, procedures, and education should be set, endorsed, and reviewed by the firm's senior management.

The firm should designate one or more lawyers whose task will be to remain current on developments in this area. These lawyers will need to make determinations about ongoing education in the firm as well as periodic revisions to policies and procedures.

Appendix A
Basic Client Intake

Upon the intake of a new client, a lawyer may wish to take some or all of the measures discussed below to help the lawyer assess the risk of money laundering and terrorist financing the potential representation of the client may entail. The degree and scope of this assessment will vary based upon, among other factors, the particulars of the proposed representation and the nature and identity of the client. This Appendix A is intended only to highlight some of the key elements of the assessment lawyers should consider and is not intended to be, nor should it be construed as, a mandatory checklist for client intake that is to be used or applied in all circumstances or a rote or mechanical fashion.

1. Client Identity. Once the lawyer has gained an understanding of the representation being sought and the client's objective, the lawyer will need to verify the identity of the client by obtaining some basic information that will enable the lawyer to "know the client" and, if applicable, its beneficial ownership.

1.1 Natural Person as Client. In the case of an individual client, depending upon the nature of the representation and level of initial concern the lawyer may have regarding the intentions or background of the client, the lawyer may need to obtain some or all of the following information: the client's name, employment background, place of birth, prior residential addresses, current residential address, business address, phone numbers, date of birth, marital status, names of prior or current spouses and/or names of children, dates of birth and social security numbers of any such spouses and/or children, the name and contact information of any other lawyers with whom the client regularly deals, the name and contact information of the client's certified public accountant, prior criminal convictions, pending lawsuits, and status of tax filings with governmental authorities. The lawyer may also wish to retain a copy of the client's driver's license or another federally issued form of photo identification and/or request that the client submit a summary of his or her personal and business history. This could help the lawyer to determine and/or verify the source of the funds to be involved in the transaction(s) in question.

1.2 Entity as Client. If the client is an entity rather than an individual (and dependent on other risk factors, such as whether the client is publicly traded), depending upon the nature of the representation and level of initial concern the lawyer may have regarding the intentions or background of the client, the lawyer should seek to obtain the names of any subsidiary/parent/nominee entities, and should obtain information on one or more of the following: the primary directors, officers, trustees, partners, managers, and/or people serving in another fiduciary capacity in connection with this entity and the entity's federal employment identification number. The lawyer should also consider whether it is necessary to obtain some of the basic information on the fiduciaries of the entity as described above. Depending on other risk factors, if not disclosed by partners, members, or shareholders of the entity when the above information is provided, the lawyer may also need to determine beneficial ownership, as discussed in more detail in the main body of this guidance.

2. Client Due Diligence. In addition to the basic information discussed above, depending on risk factors and the level of disclosures made by the client, the lawyer may find it advisable to request letters of introduction or letters of reference from other professionals that have past experience with the client, such as other transactional lawyers, bankers, and certified public accountants

2.1 OFAC List. It would also be prudent for the lawyer to check the Office of Foreign Assets Control's Specially Designated Nationals and Blocked Persons list at <http://www.treas.gov/offices/enforcement/ofac/sdn/t11sdn.pdf> for the name of the client, the client's spouse, the client's beneficial owners, and/or other related persons, and any relevant business entities.⁷⁴

2.2 Other Searches. Another suggested due diligence measure is the conducting of an Internet search (for example, a Google search (www.google.com)) of the client's name, the client's spouse and/or other related persons, and any relevant business entities. Although the accuracy of the Internet should not be relied upon, search results may provide the lawyer with valuable information that is not readily available elsewhere. For example, an Internet search might yield a link to an article that indicates a potential client's connections to a business entity involved in a pending or previous criminal proceeding. If so, the lawyer can then determine whether and to what extent to check available court records to verify this information.

2.3 Background Checks. Depending on the risk profile of the client, background checks can also prove to be useful in evaluating the potential risk involved in accepting the representation of a new client. For instance, Accurint (www accurint.com) is a service that provides information on a client's past and current addresses, any bankruptcies, liens, judgments and UCC filings against it, and any business entities and job titles associated with the client's name. It also provides information on the client's business associates as well as driver's licenses issued to the client, and possibly information regarding any criminal record, sexual offenses, concealed weapons permits, associates, relatives, and properties of the client.

3. Periodic Update. Depending on a current evaluation of risk factors, the lawyer may wish to repeat some or all of these steps on an annual or other appropriate periodic basis to ensure that the status of the client has not changed.

⁷⁴ In circumstances where the client's business or the proposed engagement warrants (such as where the client is engaged in the export business), it may also be prudent for the lawyer to check the Denied Persons List at <http://www.bis.doc.gov/dpl/Default.shtm>.

REPORT

I. Executive Summary

The American Bar Association’s Task Force on Gatekeeper Regulation and the Profession (“Task Force”) was formed over eight years ago to address certain issues arising from increased interest among U.S. government and foreign regulatory officials in combating money laundering and terrorist financing and enlisting the assistance of certain professionals, including lawyers, in this effort (“Gatekeeper Initiative”). The American Bar Association participated in a project by the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering (“FATF”) to develop risk-based guidance to client due diligence in the delivery of legal services. This project culminated in the issuance by FATF on October 23, 2008 of risk based guidance for the legal profession. Known as “RBA Guidance for Legal Professionals” (“Lawyer Guidance”), this document directed the legal profession to implement the Lawyer Guidance.

FATF, Congress, and federal regulators have exerted considerable pressure on the legal profession to proactively address the vulnerabilities facing the legal profession to money laundering and terrorist financing. Since the issuance of the Lawyer Guidance, the Task Force has collaborated with several ABA sections and specialty bar associations to develop voluntary risk based guidance for the U.S. legal profession. This effort culminated in the development of a paper entitled “Voluntary Good Practices Guidance for Lawyers to Detect and Combat Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing” (“Good Practices Guidance”). The Good Practices Guidance, dated April 23, 2010, is designed to implement the Lawyer Guidance by providing practical and understandable guidance to the legal profession for the development of a risk based approach to client due diligence.

The following groups have endorsed the Good Practices Guidance: the Task Force; the ABA Section of Real Property, Trust, and Estate Law; the ABA Business Law Section, the ABA International Law Section; the ABA Criminal Justice Section; the ABA Law Practice Management Section; the American College of Trust and Estate Counsel; the American College of Real Estate Lawyers; the American College of Mortgage Attorneys; and the American College of Commercial Finance Lawyers.

The adoption by the ABA of the Good Practices Guidance will respond to requests by FATF, Congress, and federal regulators for guidance to the legal profession, which may serve to preclude the imposition of a rules-based federal regulatory approach on the legal profession. A rules-based approach would invariably trigger significant issues with regard to the attorney-client privilege, the duty of client confidentiality, the attorney-client relationship, and the delivery of legal services more generally.

¹ The Financial Action Task Force (“FATF”) is an inter-governmental body comprised of 35 members whose purpose is the development and promotion of national and international policies to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. The FATF is therefore a ‘policy-making body’ that works to generate the necessary political will to bring about legislative and regulatory reforms in these areas. The FATF has published 40 + 9 Recommendations in order to meet this objective.

II. Background on the Gatekeeper Initiative.

The Gatekeeper Initiative originates from the Moscow Communiqué issued at the 1999 meeting of the G-8 Finance Ministers. It calls on countries to consider various means to address money laundering through the efforts of professional gatekeepers of the international financial system, including lawyers, accountants, company formation agents, and others.

In recent years, the fight against money laundering has gained importance in the priorities of many countries. Moved by the FATF, the leading global organization in the fight against money laundering, governments from countries that comprise the principal financial centers have worked collaboratively to identify money laundering typologies, develop recommendations on best practices to combat money laundering, criminalize money laundering around the world, and encourage cooperation among national law enforcement and regulation agencies. Following the Moscow Communiqué, FATF created a working group that identified several professions as “gatekeepers” with respect to money laundering. On May 31, 2002, FATF published a consultation paper entitled “Review of the FATF 40 Recommendations” in which FATF identified several areas where possible changes could be made to FATF’s anti-money laundering (“AML”) framework. The broad topics covered concern customer due diligence and suspicious transaction reporting (“STR”), beneficial ownership and control of corporate vehicles, and the application of AML obligations to non-financial businesses and professions, including the legal profession.

In the United States, the Money Laundering and Financial Crime Strategy Act of 1998 obligates the U.S. Departments of Justice and Treasury to issue an annual “National Money Laundering Strategy Report,” outlining a plan of action to enhance U.S. AML efforts. The report for 2000 tasked the Justice Department with reviewing the professional responsibilities of lawyers and making recommendations “ranging from enhanced professional education, standards, or rules, or legislation, as may be needed.” A similar theme was set forth in the report for 2001. An inter-agency working group was established, including the Department of Justice (“DOJ”), the Department of Treasury (“Treasury”), the Securities and Exchange Commission, and Treasury’s Financial Crimes and Enforcement Network (“FinCEN”). This inter-agency group is charged with developing a U.S. position on the Gatekeeper Initiative.

III. Gatekeeper Task Force.

A. Background.

The cataclysmic terrorist attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001 triggered responses from FATF and the ABA. A month after these terrorist attacks, FATF expanded its mandate to address terrorist financing and issued the Special Recommendations on Terrorist Financing. The Special Recommendations, originally comprised of eight recommendations intended to complement the Forty Recommendations, are designed to combat the funding of terrorist acts and terrorist organizations. A ninth special recommendation was added in October 2004 to address the concerns with cash couriers, thereby constituting the Nine Special Recommendations.

The Forty Recommendations and the Nine Special Recommendations are sometimes collectively referred to as the 40+9 Recommendations.

In February 2002, ABA President Robert E. Hirshon created the Task Force to address the Gatekeeper Initiative. The mission of the Task Force is to respond to initiatives by DOJ, Treasury, the Congress, FATF, and others that will affect the attorney-client relationship in the context of AML enforcement. The Task Force (a) reviews and evaluates ABA policies and rules regarding the ability of attorneys to disclose client activity and information, and works to develop positions on the Gatekeeper issue, (b) develops educational programs for legal professionals and law students, and (c) organizes resource materials to allow lawyers to comply with their AML responsibilities. At the time the Task Force was established, the principal focus of the Task Force with regard to federal AML policy was whether the federal government would impose a mandatory STR requirement on lawyers, i.e., filing with federal government regulators or law enforcement personnel reports on suspicious activity by clients, and being prohibited from informing clients that such a report had been filed (the so-called “no tipping off” rule). This would have made lawyers subject to reporting obligations that are similar to what banks and other financial institutions have for reporting suspicious financing transactions to FinCEN.

B. Efforts.

In response to concerns with the imposition of the STR requirement on the U.S. legal profession, in February 2002, the ABA Criminal Justice Section proposed a recommendation before the ABA House of Delegates that stated “That the American Bar Association urges the United States government to seek to protect and uphold the attorney/client relationship, including the attorney/client privilege, in dealing with international money laundering.”

1. Resolution 104. In February 2003, the Task Force submitted a Recommendation and Report to the House of Delegates on the Gatekeeper Initiative. The Section of Real Property, Probate and Trust Law (now the Section of Real Property, Trust and Estate Law), the Criminal Justice Section, the Section of Litigation, and the Section of International Law joined in this submission. The Recommendation supported the enactment of reasonable and balanced initiatives to detect and prevent money laundering and terrorist financing. At the same time, the Recommendation opposed any law or regulation that would compel lawyers to disclose privileged or confidential information to government officials based on “suspicious” activity of the client, or otherwise compromise the attorney-client relationship or independence of the bar. The Recommendation also noted that the Model Rules of Professional Responsibility would continue to be reviewed as they relate to the obligations of lawyers to maintain client confidences, and urged bar associations and law schools to undertake educational efforts on money laundering risks and concerns.

The Report accompanying this Recommendation explained the appropriate role of lawyers in U.S. government efforts to combat money laundering; analyzed the legal and ethical problems arising from any mandatory reporting obligation to the U.S. government to reveal client information that involves a “suspicion” of possible money laundering or other criminal activity; and discussed existing legal and ethical requirements that minimize the risk that lawyers will be involved in money laundering activities. The Recommendation, dated February 10-11, 2003, is now known as Resolution 104.

2. Resolution 300. In 2008, two developments emerged that prompted the Task Force to submit a Report and Recommendation to the House of Delegates at the 2008 annual meeting in New York City. First, in May 2008, federal legislation was proposed to require those who form unincorporated business entities, trusts, partnerships, and other organizational structures to document, verify, and make available to law enforcement authorities the record and beneficial ownership of these business entities. This legislation would impose significant and difficult burdens on company formation agents (including lawyers in some circumstances), state authorities, and others to comply with this legislation. Second, in 2008 FATF was in the process of developing the risk-based Lawyer Guidance.

In response to these two developments, the Task Force Report and Recommendation provided that states, and not the federal government, should retain the authority to regulate those who form these unincorporated business entities. The Report and Recommendation noted that amendments to certain uniform and model laws relating to the formation of these business entities were currently under review to address concerns raised by law enforcement officials and policy makers. The Recommendation opposed federal legislation as premature, in order to provide the states with the opportunity to develop a uniform solution to address the issue of beneficial ownership when forming entities under state law.

The Report and Recommendation also urged U.S. lawyers to develop voluntary risk-based guidance for client due diligence, and directed the ABA to develop this voluntary guidance for one or more of its constituent sections and to engage with the federal government and other interested parties in this process. The Report and Recommendation cautioned that, absent this voluntary guidance, it is possible that federal regulators and lawmakers could impose a rules-based approach on the legal profession, thereby triggering significant issues with regard to the attorney-client privilege, the duty of client confidentiality, the attorney-client relationship, and the delivery of legal services more generally. The Recommendation, dated August 11-12, 2008, is now known as Resolution 300.

Since the adoption of Resolution 300, the Task Force has developed the Good Practices Guidance, obtained endorsements of the Good Practices Guidance by various ABA sections and specialty bar associations, participated in lawyer educational programs on AML risks and compliance more generally; maintained a dialogue with the federal government and FATF concerning the imposition of STR and other AML requirements on the legal profession; and interacted with other U.S. and non-U.S. bar associations, law societies, and legal professional organizations concerning government policy and the work of FATF regarding the role of the legal profession in preventing money laundering and terrorist financing.

IV. Risk-Based Approach and Good Practices Guidance.

The risk-based approach is grounded in the premise that the limited resources (both governmental and private sector) available to combat money laundering and terrorist financing should be employed and allocated in the most efficient manner possible so that the sources of the greatest risks receive the most attention. A risk-based approach is intended to ensure that measures to prevent or mitigate money laundering and terrorist financing are commensurate with the risks identified, thereby facilitating an efficient allocation of this limited pool of resources.

The proportionate nature of the risk-based approach means that higher risk areas should be subject to enhanced risk-based procedures, such as enhanced client due diligence (“CDD”) and enhanced transaction monitoring. By contrast, simplified, modified, or reduced risk management procedures may apply in lower risk areas (for purposes of this Guidance, “reduced” shall hereafter include “simplified” and “modified”). An effective risk-based approach involves identifying and categorizing money laundering and terrorist financing risks and establishing reasonable controls based on the risks identified.

FATF has been active in developing risk-based guidance for financial institutions and designated non-financial businesses and professions (“DNFBPs”), including legal professionals. In June 2007, FATF adopted Guidance on the Risk-Based Approach to Combating Money Laundering and Terrorist Financing: High Level Principles and Procedures, which includes guidance for public authorities and guidance for financial institutions (“Financial Institution Guidance”). This effort was the culmination of extensive consultation between private and public sector members of an Electronic Advisory Group (“EAG”) established by FATF.

In addition to financial institutions, the FATF Recommendations also cover a number of DNFBPs. At its June 2007 meeting, the FATF’s Working Group on Evaluation and Implementation (“WGEI”) endorsed a proposal to convene a meeting of the representatives from the DNFBPs to assess the possibility of developing guidance on the risk-based approach for their sectors, using the same structure and style as the Financial Institution Guidance.

Three months later, in September 2007, FATF convened a meeting in London attended by members of organizations that represent lawyers, notaries, trust and company service providers (“TCSPs”), accountants, casinos, real estate agents and dealers in precious metals and dealers in precious stones. The Gatekeeper Task Force representatives attended this meeting. This private sector group expressed an interest in contributing to Lawyer Guidance on implementing a risk-based approach for their sectors. The guidance for the DNFBPs would follow the principles of the risk-based approach already established by FATF, and would highlight risk factors specific to the DNFBPs, as well as suggest mitigation strategies that fit with the particular activities and businesses of the DNFBPs. The FATF established another EAG to facilitate the work. The U.S. government, through the Treasury Department, was supportive of the FATF effort and its outreach to the private sector.

The private sector group met again in December 2007 in Bern, Switzerland and was joined by a number of specialist public sector members, including representatives from the Gatekeeper Task Force and the American College of Trust and Estate Counsel. Separate working groups comprising public and private sectors members were established, and private sector chairs were appointed. The EAG met in Paris in April 2008, in London in June 2008, and in Ottawa in September 2008 to advance discussions on developing guidance for legal professionals. After further international consultation with both public and private sectors, FATF adopted the Lawyer Guidance at its October 2008 plenary in Rio de Janeiro.² Guidance for each of the other DNFBP sectors was published separately.

The Lawyer Guidance, dated April 23, 2010, contains 126 separately numbered paragraphs and organizationally tracks the Financial Institutions Guidance developed by FATF for the financial institutions industry that served as a template for the Lawyer Guidance. The Lawyer Guidance is a complex document that addresses different audiences (e.g., private sector and public authorities), undertakes to identify the AML and anti-terrorist financing, or counter financing of terrorism (“CFT”), issues specific to the legal profession, and outlines the risk factors that lawyers need to consider in developing a risk-based system.

The Lawyer Guidance is “high level” guidance intended to provide a broad framework for implementing a risk-based approach for the legal profession. It does not offer detailed direction on the application of this approach to specific factual situations, nor does it take into account the practical realities of the practice of law in an increasingly complex environment or attempt to address jurisdictional variations among the FATF member countries. For those reasons, the Lawyer Guidance urges the legal profession generally, or in different countries, to develop “good practice in the design and implementation of an effective risk-based approach.”³

In response to the Lawyer Guidance, the Gatekeeper Task Force and representatives from other ABA sections and specialty bar associations developed the Good Practices Guidance. The goal of the Good Practices Guidance is to assist members of the legal profession in the United States in designing and implementing effective risk-based approaches consistent with the broad contours of the Lawyer Guidance. The Good Practices Guidance is not intended to be, nor should it be construed as, a statement of the standard of care governing the activities of lawyers in implementing a risk-based approach to combat money laundering and terrorist financing. Rather, given the vast differences in practices, firms, and lawyers throughout the United States, the Good Practices Guidance seeks only to serve as a resource that lawyers can use in developing their own voluntary risk-based approaches. At the same time, the Good Practices Guidance is not intended to be an academic exercise. The federal government is under pressure from FATF and others (including development agencies, the Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development, the International Monetary Fund, The World Bank, and the United Nations) to adopt legislation implementing some or all of the provisions of the Lawyer Guidance. An overarching purpose of the Good Practices Guidance is to encourage and empower lawyers to develop and implement voluntary, but effective, risk-based approaches consistent with the Lawyer Guidance, thereby negating the need for federal regulation of the legal profession.

The first section of the Good Practices Guidance provides an overview of the mechanics of money laundering and terrorist financing so that practitioners can better understand and achieve the goals of the United States' and FATF's AML/CFT efforts. The sections that follow then describe the risk-based approach and recommended client due diligence, identify those lawyers who are subject to the Lawyer Guidance, specify the activities that are addressed by the Lawyer Guidance, list and analyze the risk categories and risk variables, and conclude with a suggested protocol for client intake and assessment and a discussion of the importance of on-going education and continuing legal education efforts in this area.

The "practice pointers" appearing throughout the text, which take the form of hypothetical fact patterns to highlight specific issues or points, are designed to provide practical guidance and insights to practitioners. They may also elaborate on a statement or concept contained in the Lawyer Guidance.

Federal regulators have reviewed the Good Practices Guidance and have expressed their support of it. These regulators view the Good Practices Guidance as a significant step in implementing an effective risk-based approach for legal professionals in the United States. Federal legislators have encouraged the ABA to issue guidance to its members prohibiting the use of any financial account to accept suspect funds involving politically exposed persons ("PEPs")⁴, conceal PEP activity, facilitate suspect transactions involving PEPs, or circumvent AML or PEP controls at U.S. financial institutions.⁵ The Good Practices Guidance is an effort to address these concerns.

The Task Force understands through discussions with U.S. Treasury Department representatives (including a meeting held on March 22, 2010 in Washington, D.C.) that it would be helpful for the ABA to exhibit leadership in the development of non-

By virtue of this position and the influence it holds, a politically exposed person present a higher risk for potential involvement in bribery and corruption.

governmentally imposed risk-based guidance for U.S. lawyers, such as the Good Practices Guidance. The Task Force's efforts in this area, coupled with on-going dialogue with Treasury Department representatives in the development and implementation of such guidance, would obviate the need for Congress to enact legislation designed to impose a rules-based system on U.S. lawyers. A copy of the Good Practices Guidance is attached hereto.

1. Summary of Recommendation(s). The Financial Action Task Force (“FATF”) is an inter-governmental body that assists countries in developing anti-money laundering and counter-terrorist financing laws and policies. The FATF has published 40 Recommendations that member countries, including the United States, are to implement in an effort to combat money laundering. The FATF issued 9 Special Recommendation after the September 11 terrorist attacks that largely focused on terrorist financing risks. Following up on Recommendations 12 and 16, on October 23, 2008, the FATF published “Risk-Based Approach Guidance for Legal Professionals”, to provide guidance to the lawyers around the world on due diligence efforts that can be undertaken to avoid money laundering and terrorist financing risks in the practice of law. This Recommendation seeks ABA House of Delegates adoption of a voluntary “Good Practices” guidance paper, developed by ABA members along with practitioners in other bar associations and professional organizations, that would (a) assist the legal profession in the United States with understanding anti-money laundering and terrorist financing risks in certain areas of legal practice, and (b) provide practical guidance on what steps lawyers can take to avoid these risks.
2. Approval by Submitting Entity. The ABA Section of Real Property, Trust and Estate Law, along with the ABA Task Force on Gatekeeper Regulation and the Profession prepared this Recommendation and Report and have approved it. Other Sections that have reviewed the voluntary “Good Practices” guidance paper and have approved it in principle are the Sections of Business Law, Criminal Justice, International Law, Law Practice Management, and Taxation which reviewed the guidance paper during their respective spring meetings.
3. Has this or a similar recommendation been submitted to the ABA House of Delegates or Board of Governors previously? The ABA Gatekeeper Task Force submitted a Recommendation at the annual meeting of the ABA in August 2008. In relevant part, that Recommendation urged the ABA Gatekeeper Task Force to work with others to develop appropriate guidance on voluntary risk-based guidance for the legal profession to address money laundering and terrorist financing risks when taking on and representing clients. That Recommendation (No. 300) was approved by the House of Delegates. At the mid-year meeting of the ABA in February 2003, the ABA Gatekeeper Task Force also sponsored a Recommendation that opposed the imposition of mandatory “suspicious transaction reporting” requirements on lawyers as part of the U.S. anti-money laundering laws. The Recommendation (No. 104) was approved.

4. What existing Association policies are relevant to this recommendation and how would they be affected by its adoption? No other Association policies, other than that identified in response to question 3, are known to be relevant to this Recommendation. This Recommendation would be consistent the policies described in response to question 3.
5. What urgency exists which requires action at this meeting of the House? The U.S. government, most notably the U.S. Department of the Treasury, is actively involved in the efforts of the Financial Action Task Force (“FATF”), as well as its own constituent agencies, to ensure that certain “designated non-financial businesses and professions (“DNFBPs”), including lawyers, take appropriate steps to avoid money laundering and terrorist financing risks and activities. The U.S. government will be subject to a “mutual evaluation” by the FATF on this and other aspects of the FATF 40+9 Recommendations in the near future. In addition, various legislative efforts have been proposed over time, including as recently as the current and prior congressional sessions, to impose federal regulation on lawyers in the area of anti-money laundering and counter-terrorist financing compliance. In connection with, and apart from, the hearings relating to these legislative proposals, U.S. legislators and their staffs have inquired about ABA efforts to develop and approve good practice guidelines. Moreover, other governments and international organizations have raised the issue of U.S. adherence to FATF standards (such as Recommendations 12 and 16 relating to lawyers) as a measure of whether there exists a level playing field, since other countries in the world also are to adhere to the DNFBP standards. The ABA Gatekeeper Task Force, consistent with existing ABA policy, has been engaged on all these efforts, interacting with various U.S. government officials, members of Congress, the FATF, and representatives of other bar associations. As part of the effort to work collaboratively with members of Congress; to support representatives of the Department of the Treasury in the current mutual evaluation process; and to address appropriate concerns of U.S. law enforcement without new federal mandates being imposed on the legal profession, it is important that action be taken to approve the voluntary “Good Practices” guidance as soon as possible.
6. Status of Legislation. (If applicable.) S.569, the Incorporation Transparency and Law Enforcement Assistance Act, contains certain provisions that could impose additional anti-money laundering and counter-terrorist financing requirements on company “formation agents”, which could include lawyers. This legislation is scheduled for mark up by the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs on June 23, 2010. The Treasury Department has proposed substitute language.
7. Cost to the Association. (Both direct and indirect costs.) None expected at this time. There may be certain travel requirements that will arise in the future, but

- we do not anticipate that costs associated with such travel would exceed $5,000 per year.
8. Disclosure of Interest. (If applicable.) None.
 9. Referrals. (List entities to which the recommendation has been referred, the date of referral and the response of each entity if known.) See response to question 2.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

1. Summary of the Recommendation: The Recommendation addresses certain international and U.S. government policy and legal initiatives relating to combating money laundering and terrorist financing in the legal profession. Efforts have been under way for nearly a decade now that possibly could impose federal regulation on the legal profession in the area of anti-money laundering counter-terrorist financing compliance. This is being driven by concerns that the legal profession, and other “designated non-financial businesses and professions,” are vulnerable to money laundering and terrorist financing risks. This concern has manifested itself in such areas as tax evasion and abuse of corporate vehicles for improper purposes. The Recommendation seeks adoption of a voluntary “Good Practices” guidance document for the legal profession in the United States, which will educate lawyers about money laundering and terrorist financing risks in certain areas of legal practice and provide guidance on how those risks can be minimized through voluntary risk-based due diligence steps. This voluntary, profession-initiated effort would help members in efforts to comply with existing laws, avoid money laundering and terrorist financing risks in delivering legal services to clients, and reduce the need for new federal mandates on the legal profession. Absent such voluntary and self-initiated efforts, legislation or federal agency action could impose regulations on lawyers in the United States, which could conflict with ethical obligations, interfere with and undermine the attorney-client relationship, and adversely affect the delivery of legal services to clients. The notion of voluntary guidance for the legal profession, through the efforts of the American Bar Association in conjunction with others (such as state and specialty bars), was approved by Recommendation 300 at the 2008 ABA annual meeting.

2. Summary of the Issue that the recommendation Addresses: See answer to item 1. The Recommendation proposes the adoption of voluntary guidance to the legal profession in the United States that would (a) educate lawyers about money laundering and terrorist financing risks, (b) offer practical assistance to lawyers to avoid such risks through risk-based due diligence steps that can be undertaken, and (c) thereby address concerns of U.S. regulators and legislators in a manner that negates the need for new federal mandates.

3. Please Explain How the Proposed Policy Position will Address the Issue. The Recommendation offers a voluntary, self-initiated approach to assisting lawyers to avoid money laundering risks. The “Good Practices” guidance would be in keeping with the tradition of the U.S. legal profession to address important issues impacting the practice of law through self-initiated, proactive action. It would demonstrate to U.S. policy makers, regulators, and legislators, as well as the Financial Action Task Force, that new federal legislation or Treasury Department regulation (for example, through the Bank Secrecy Act or the USA PATRIOT Act) vis-à-vis the legal profession is not necessary to address money laundering and terrorist financing concerns that may exist in the formation of legal entities, real estate transactions, banking, or the sale and purchase of legal entities.

4. Summary of Minority Views There are no known minority views.
