

---

---

About the Editor

---

---

Lynne Zusman has practiced law for many years and served federal government clients, private individual clients, and private corporate clients. A graduate of Bryn Mawr College cum laude with honors in political science and the Yale Law School, during the administration of former President Jimmy Carter she was tasked with screening cases brought against the U.S. government under the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act of 1974 for recommendations aligning this defensive litigation, which she was responsible for, with President Carter's many initiatives for openness in government and privacy protection of individual citizens. Fundamentals of Counterterrorism Law is a direct outgrowth of this experience in legal accountability for national security objectives, as well as other important American governmental responsibilities. She has developed and edited two previous American Bar Association books: The Law of Counterterrorism (2011) and Homeland Security: Legal and Policy Issues (2009, coeditor).