

Contents

Acknowledgments	xi
Preface	xiii
Introduction	xix
A case study: Whose side are you on?	xx
Why reach into the internal world in conflict resolution? Because the solutions are there	xxiv
Helping clients resolve conflicts from the inside out	xxvi
The journey toward the center	xxvii
1 Discovering the Power of Self-Reflection in Conflict	1
The experiment	2
The first discovery: You don't have to take sides	3
The current of feelings becomes visible	3
A mediator isn't an objectively neutral container	5
Into the fishbowl	6
The meditation connection: Awareness is a muscle	8
Self-reflection comes to mediation training in SCPI	10
Practicing self-reflection	12
Bringing inner experience into the heat of conflict: The four themes of the program	14
Summary	15

2 Becoming Present	17
What is presence?	18
Presence lets us discern what's not expressed in words	19
The thoughts and emotions that distract us	21
Opening to the value of our emotions	22
Rational barriers to presence: Law and experience	24
Earl and Harold: Problems law alone couldn't solve	25
"Case No. Forty-Two" Syndrome	27
A solution: Beginner's mind	28
Practices to develop presence in the heat of the moment	28
1. Using the body	28
2. Noticing the inner experience, in real time	29
3. Taking three breaths	30
4. Previewing the day	31
5. Letting go	31
Summary	32
3 Working with Emotions: Going Down the V	35
The V	35
Creating the Internal V	37
In brief: The steps of the Internal V	39
Understanding the feelings first, then connecting	40
First steps toward the V: Training ourselves to notice and value emotions	41
Judgments stand in our way, so that's where we start	42
A new perspective on an old adversary	46
The V, step-by-step: How one case evolved	46
Stan and Eleanor: Trust and money	47
"The opportunist and the sucker": The judgments appear	47
Judgments are different from discernments	48
Investigating our judgments to discover the feelings below them	48
"What's really bothering me about this situation?"	49
Deeper levels of feelings	49

Proceeding from a new starting point: Curiosity and compassion	51
Leading the parties to the feelings below their own judgments	53
Entering the parties' Internal Vs	54
Staying connected, crafting new solutions	56
Connection is a beginning, not an end	58
Summary	58
4 Learning to Use the Internal V	61
In the fishbowl: Selena	61
Bringing deeper emotions out of hiding	62
The power of expressing the unexpressed	63
At the core, something deeply personal	64
Connected, but not frozen	65
Our journey often parallels our clients'	66
Empathy begets empathy	66
All this talk of feelings: Is this therapy?	67
We always have a choice about doing the work	68
What does it take to stay with the process?	69
Six lessons for approaching the V	69
1. It's a fundamental error to see the self as the center of the universe.	70
2. The truth is more interesting than protecting ourselves.	71
3. Compassion for others is related to compassion for self.	71
4. Living for self alone is soulless and unsatisfying.	72
5. Fear can be a friend.	72
6. When we change, the clients change.	72
Howard and Shelley: Reaching through distrust and hostility	73
It doesn't all happen at once	75
V work gets easier and faster with practice	75
There's always a way to pause for the V	76
In their own words: SCPIs on the V	77

Exercises to support working with the V	78
Buddy practice	78
Journal exercises and prompts for the V	79
Other journal exercises	80
Summary	80

5 Self-Reflection in Action: “How” Lessons from Four SCPIs

1. Joseph: Loosening the attachment to being right	83
Spotting the clue: A strong reaction to something small	84
The expanding power of knowing the self	85
A path to connecting with the client	86
Insights that unfold into life	86
2. Melanie: Reconnecting with a client after leaving her in tears	87
Analyzing not just the reaction, but the feelings about the reaction	88
The tone shifts, and the possibilities widen	88
3. Dan: Building trust with a couple that exasperates him	89
A shift to curiosity, and consciousness about the dynamic	90
The real issue for Dan: Respect	91
4. Sarah: Re-centering after a client says, “You’re not tough enough to help me.”	92
First anger, then doubt	92
Allowing in the client’s reality	93
Compassion, emerging and expressed	93
Sarah’s lesson was also the lesson for the client	94
Summary	95

6 Connecting Our Internal Experience to Solving the Problem	97
The problem didn't originate with you	97
Opening communication, and possibilities, with the V	98
Jeannie and the truck driver: A wrongful death?	99
A negotiation in less-than-ideal circumstances	100
First impressions and judgments	100
Testing the sense that "the truck driver's side is uncaring"	101
Tracking inner responses to the missing "villain"	102
A human, emotional sense of not knowing who and what is right	103
Connecting inner responses into an emotional framework	104
A resolution	104
Summary	105
7 Case Study: The Inventor and the Businessman	107
The issues: Blame and control	107
Going down the V	108
1. Body and breath	108
2. Feelings	108
3. Judgment	108
4. Deeper feelings	108
5. Turning judgment into curiosity	109
6. Compassion	109
7. Connection	110
8. The bubbles	110
Going up the V	111
1. Expression and the back-and-forth movement up the V	111
2. The shift	113
3. Finding a solution	113
Summary	115

8 Fuel for the Long Run: Our Motivations	117
Exploring the upper layers	118
1. "I value peace over conflict, cooperation over an adversary system."	118
2. "I want to step out of a coercive system and show people the 'magic of mediation.'"	119
3. "I want to heal people and society, not polarize."	119
4. "I want to make the world a better place."	120
5. "I want to help people reach agreements."	120
Below the ideals: Connecting to our early and deep motivations	121
The power of a collective search	121
Setting the tone: A meditation on the roots of our work	122
Finding the through-line	122
The family stories that shape us	123
The wounded healer	125
Joan: Exploring motivation and coming to terms with control	126
A first layer of motivation: Escaping frustration	126
The deeper issue: Control	126
Following the "why trail" to the source	127
Working with emotions to stay true to motivations	128
Motivation in testing times	129
Sandy and Phil: Coming through "failure" with stronger motivation	130
Dedicating our work to others	131
Parties' motivations may be different from ours, and we have to work with that	133
Practices for exploring and connecting with our motivations	134
Guided meditation	134
Buddy work	134
The daily preview	134
Physical reminders of our motivations: Touching the chair	135
Summary	135

Coda
Bringing SCPI Home	137
If you'd like to try SCPI	138
The group will evolve	140
Appendix A
The Everyday SCPI Experience	143
The first core practice: Meditation and meditative activity	144
Challenges and benefits of sitting meditation	146
Walking meditation	147
Other paths to self-reflection	148
In their own words: The SCPIs' experience with meditation	148
The second core practice: Journaling	148
In their own words: The SCPIs' experience with journal writing	150
The third core practice: Learning to observe the Observer	150
Two techniques: Looping and "separating the how from the what"	150
The buddy system	152
Unintended benefits of the buddy system	154
In their own words: The SCPIs' experience of the buddy system	154
Guidelines for buddies	155
Two additional practices for self-reflection	156
The daily review	156
Return to the body	156
About the Author
Gary J. Friedman	159
Index	161