

About the Authors

Eric M. Stahl is a partner with Davis Wright Tremaine LLP. A member of the firm's Media and Los Angeles Complex Litigation groups, he represents media and entertainment companies, advertisers and other communications companies in intellectual property, commercial and First Amendment disputes. Along with co-author Henry Tashman, he represented the plaintiff in the jury trial in Columbia Pictures Television v. Krypton Broadcasting, resulting in what was at the time the largest reported award of copyright statutory damages. He also regularly litigates offensive and defensive copyright and DMCA claims involving publications, motion pictures, photographs, music and digital works. Mr. Stahl chairs the ABA's IP Law Section's Copyright Litigation Committee and has served as a National Trustee and Northwest chapter chair of the Copyright Society of the USA. He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, obtained his J.D. from the University of Washington School of Law, and is admitted to the Washington state and California bars.

Henry J. Tashman is the founding partner of Davis Wright Tremaine's Los Angeles Litigation, Antitrust, Intellectual Property, Media and Entertainment practices. He is currently the chair of the firm's Los Angeles Complex Litigation Group. He has handled hundreds of complex antitrust, contract and intellectual property cases as both outside counsel and in-house counsel for a major entertainment company. His copyright litigation experience includes both jury and bench trials and numerous appeals, as well as arguing before the United States Supreme Court in Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television. He has represented several major studios, motion picture industry associations, video game developers, technology companies, television networks, news organizations and publishers in copyright and other intellectual property disputes, and has served as an expert witness on U.S. intellectual property issues before the United Kingdom High. After graduating from the University of Connecticut, Mr. Tashman received his J.D. from Georgetown University Law Center. He is a member of the New York and California bars.