

About the Author

Joel Cohen is a highly respected white collar criminal defense lawyer in New York. He has practiced in that field as well as complex civil litigation at Stroock & Stroock & Lavan LLP for nearly thirty years, after having worked for ten years as a prosecutor with the New York State Special Prosecutor's Office and then with the U.S. Justice Department's Organized Crime & Racketeering Section in the Eastern District of New York. Joel writes regularly for the New York Law Journal, Law.com, and the Huffington Post on criminal law, legal ethics, and social policy. He frequently lectures lawyers, judges, and the public on varied issues, including ethics and religion. He teaches Professional Responsibility at Fordham Law School and has cocreated a new seminar based on this book to be given at Fordham Law. Blindfolds Off is Joel's first book of nonfiction—he has published several works of Biblical fiction, including Moses: A Memoir, David and Bathsheba: Through Nathan's Eyes, and Moses and Jesus: A Conversation. Finally, he has also authored Truth Be Veiled, a Justin Steele Murder Case, a novel that addresses the criminal lawyer's dilemma in dealing with truth.
