About the Editors of the
International Human Rights Law Sourcebook

Alice Beauheim Borene is an attorney and expert in international law, security, human rights, civil liberties, and privacy. She works for the U.S. government. During 2013, she was a Visiting Fellow in International Human Rights at the University of Minnesota. Alice also served in the U.S. Army as a Serbian-Croatian linguist and intelligence analyst. She was a 2009 Presidential Management Fellowship Finalist, and, while in law school, interned with the Office of the Prosecutor of the State Court of Bosnia-Herzegovina, where she assisted international prosecutors in building war crimes cases. Some of her professional writing can be found on the Lawfare national security law blog of Brookings Institution. Alice holds a JD from the University of Virginia, an MA in modern European history from the University of Washington, and a BA in history from the University of Minnesota.

Andrew Borene is an attorney and a business executive with special expertise in the national security enterprise, information workflow, government relations, and building world-leading strategic relationships between public, private, and academic partners. He is an adjunct professor of political science at Macalester College and serves on the Truman National Security Project’s Defense Council. He is Director of Special Projects for the American Bar Association’s Standing Committee on Law and National Security. Andrew is a former Associate Deputy General Counsel with the U.S. Department of Defense and taught as adjunct faculty at the University of Minnesota’s Humphrey School of Public Affairs. He has professional experience with several high-tech companies, Wells Fargo & Co. and LexisNexis. He also served as a U.S. Marine military intelligence officer in Iraq. During law school, he was a judicial extern in the chambers of Judge John Tunheim, U.S. District Court, District of Minnesota. In 2009, he was a U.S. Department of State funded fellow for the study of post-conflict peacebuilding in Northern Ireland. Andrew holds a J.D. from the University of Minnesota Law School and a B.A. in economics from Macalester College. He completed an executive education program at Harvard University’s Institute for International Development. He is licensed to practice law in the District of Columbia, Minnesota, and before the U.S. Court of International Trade and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Michael Sullivan is an international attorney and human rights lecturer. He served for over three years in Afghanistan with the U.S. Department of State, where he founded of the United States Kandahar Provincial Reconstruction Team’s (PRT) Rule of Law Program, and subsequently served as the DoS Rule of Law Director for Regional Command South. For his work on rule of law and human rights issues, he received numerous awards including the State Department’s Superior
Honor Award. Michael researched humanitarian law while earning his master’s degree at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy; applied his findings while working as a human rights reporter in Kosovo during the time of the Racak Massacre; advised foreign delegations (to include foreign military intelligence, defense policymakers, and force planners) on humanitarian law and human rights instruments while serving as a international law lecturer for the State Department’s Antiterrorism Assistance Program; and worked in Iraq with the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs (NDI), assisting the Iraqi Constitutional Drafting Committee with drafting language for the new Constitution. He also conducted human rights and historical research at Harvard University’s JFK School of Government and was a guest lecturer on the laws of war at U.S. Naval War College. Michael earned his juris doctor degree from Northeastern University School of Law. Following graduation from law school, he was awarded a Fellowship to the Salzburg Global Seminar focusing on the Social and Economic Dimensions of Human Rights.