About the Authors

Steve McJohn is a professor of law at Suffolk University Law School in Boston, Massachusetts, and is a specialist in intellectual property and commercial law. Professor McJohn received his B.A. in computer studies and his J.D., magna cum laude, from Northwestern University. Before law school, he was a software developer in the Radar Systems Group of Hughes Aircraft. After studying law in Germany and a federal appellate clerkship, Professor McJohn practiced law in the Chicago office of Latham and Watkins and taught at the IIT Chicago-Kent School of Law. He has authored numerous scholarly articles and textbooks on intellectual property, commercial law, computer law, artificial intelligence, and economic analysis.

Lorie M. Graham is a professor of law and co-director of the International Law Concentration at Suffolk University Law School in Boston, Massachusetts. She has been a visiting professor at Harvard Law School and at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. She teaches courses on property law, international law, human rights, and indigenous peoples rights. Professor Graham holds a master of laws degree from Harvard Law School, and a B.S. and J.D. from Syracuse University. She has served as the executive director of the Harvard University Native American Program; practiced law at Kramer, Levin, Naftalis & Frankel in New York City; clerked for the Honorable Richard D. Simons of the New York Court of Appeals; and continues her practice in the area of human rights law. She recently published a second edition of International Law: Examples and Explanations (Wolters Kluwer, 2014), and has published widely on a range of issues, including articles on intellectual property, land claims, economic development, and media rights.