

About the Authors

Brendon Ishikawa is certified as a specialist in appellate law by the State Bar of California Board of Legal Specialization and has practiced appellate law for the past twenty years. He serves as a lead appellate court attorney at the California Court of Appeal, Third District. In his prior private practice, Mr. Ishikawa served as counsel in more than 100 appeals and writ proceedings. He regularly writes about and teaches appellate law, risk analysis, and other mediation-related skills to attorneys and mediators.

Dana Curtis was among the first attorneys in the country to devote her career exclusively to mediation of civil matters, beginning her full-time practice in 1991. Since serving as a Circuit Mediator with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, Ms. Curtis has maintained a private mediation practice in the Bay Area for which the Los Angeles Daily Journal has recognized her as one of the 50 “Best Neutrals” in California. Ms. Curtis taught mediation at Stanford Law School for 10 years and presently co-teaches Mediating Disputes for Harvard Law School’s Program on Negotiation. For over 20 years, Ms. Curtis has designed and facilitated appellate mediation training programs throughout the United States.
