John Bandler runs a law firm and a consulting practice that help businesses and individuals with cybersecurity and cybercrime investigations, among other areas. His expertise stems from over twenty years of experience working in law enforcement and the private sector. He served as a state trooper in the New York State Police for eight years, assigned to one of the state's busiest stations that provided full police services to the local community. While serving in the state police he attended law school at the evening program of Pace University School of Law, and then was hired as an Assistant District Attorney by the legendary Robert Morgenthau. At the New York County District Attorney's Office he investigated and prosecuted a wide variety of criminal offenses, ranging from violent crime to identity theft, financial crime, and cybercrime. One investigation into a single incidence of credit card fraud eventually uncovered an international network of cybercriminals and identity thieves who stole data, sold it, and then used it for fraud. This groundbreaking case provided a breathtaking view of the cybercrime economy and its participants. John holds a number of information security and information technology certifications, and writes, lectures, and teaches on cybersecurity and cybercrime.
