

About the Author

Ahmed Abdel-Hakam is a solicitor-advocate before the Higher Courts of England and Wales and a French avocat, specializing in commercial and investor-state arbitration.

Based in London, he represents clients in high-profile cross-border disputes with a multilingual element and legal and in procedural issues across civil and common law jurisdictions. He draws on more than ten years of practice at world-leading law firms that specialize in international disputes. He has advised both multinationals and states in disputes arising out of investments (oil and gas, mining, and telecommunications) situated in jurisdictions that at some point faced complex and challenging legal issues (e.g., Iraq, Yemen, Libya, and South Sudan).

Ahmed advises investors on both potential claims under international investment law and investment structuring to access investment treaty protections. He also provides training to governments on investment treaty arbitration and is a contributor to “Investment Claims,” an Oxford University Press online publication. He regularly speaks at conferences on energy and natural resources on the African continent.

In 2019, Ahmed was selected as a Young Leader by the Franco-British Council, which annually selects a small group of talented French and British individuals under 40 with distinguished careers across a variety of sectors, from sciences to arts, politics, law, the military, and finance. He also currently serves on the Y-ADR Steering Committee of the International Institute for Conflict Prevention & Resolution (CPR) based in New York.
