One in five Americans has a disability. As businesses have expanded their disability recruitment and hiring efforts, they have found including the perspectives of persons with disabilities in problem-solving leads to novel and better solutions. People with disabilities bring unique talents and skills to the fore that drive creativity and innovation. By advocating for all technology to be accessible, they in turn drive innovation, expanding client bases, and helping other underrepresented groups strengthen their own diversity.

Our panelists will discuss their disability inclusion strategies, examine the business case for hiring people with disabilities, and share how their corporations are driving innovation through disability inclusion.
