Professor Andrea Kupfer Schneider has been named the 2017 recipient of the ABA Section of Dispute Resolution Award for Outstanding Scholarly Work. This award honors individuals whose scholarship has contributed significantly to the field of dispute resolution.

Professor Schneider is a Professor of Law and the Director of the nationally ranked ADR program at Marquette University Law School where she teaches ADR, Negotiation, Ethics and International Conflict Resolution. A prolific scholar, Professor Schneider has focused on increasing the reach of dispute resolution scholarship into international and interdisciplinary realms as well as translating theory into practice. Her primary focus has been on negotiation, a subject that she has approached from a wide range of perspectives, including gender, international relations, and pedagogy. She has incorporated a range of social science research into her work from psychology, economics, and political science and has also done empirical work in the field.

By collaborating with a broad range of scholars, Professor Schneider has not only enriched her own work but also contributed greatly to others’ work and to our field. Her co-edited collections of international and interdisciplinary essays in negotiation pursue her goal of making these theories available to a broad audience. Her textbooks take these interdisciplinary sources and translate them into practical advice for students. In addition to co-authoring and co-editing books and over 60 articles she has actively worked to enlarge the scholarly community and increase its connections among scholars around the world. She founded the Indisputably Blog, created the annual AALS Dispute Resolution Works-in-Progress conference, helped organize numerous conferences and presentations, and has enthusiastically participated in bar association and academic projects that connect scholarly work to the world of practice. Last year, she gave her first TEDx talk entitled “Women Don’t Negotiate and Other Similar Nonsense.”

Professor Schneider gives negotiation trainings around the world to corporations, law firms, court systems, and, most recently, has focused on faculty in the STEM and medical fields for which she has now received federal grants for software development and training. She received her A.B. cum laude from the Woodrow Wilson School of International Affairs and Public Policy at Princeton University and her J.D. cum laude from Harvard Law School. She also received a Diploma from the Academy of European Law in Florence, Italy.

The Scholarly Work Award will be presented to Professor Schneider on April 22, 2017 at the Legal Educators Colloquium Luncheon in San Francisco, CA.

The awards reception is a ticketed event. For tickets and more information about the Spring Conference and the ABA Section of Dispute Resolution Awards Reception, go to ambar.org/spring2017.
