No Deportation Without Representation?
A Panel Discussion Led by Journalist and Al Jazeera America Host
Ray Suarez

The 6th Amendment right to counsel attaches in all criminal prosecutions...but what about in-custody detainees in immigration and deportation proceedings? How can detained minors, the mentally ill and other vulnerable populations represent themselves in such proceedings? What are the rights of vulnerable immigrants and the responsibility of government following Franco and other litigation? What innovative programs exist around the country to address these issues? This fast paced Presidential Showcase presentation and panel discussion examines the plight of detained individuals held in detention centers throughout the United States, reviews the current state of the law and immigration policies and examines several innovative programs providing appointed counsel from across the country.

This distinguished panel is moderated by Al Jazeera America broadcast journalist and author Ray Suarez. Mr. Suarez was formerly a senior correspondent and journalist for PBS NewsHour and National Public Radio’s Talk of the Nation, and is the author of numerous books, including “500 Years of Latinos in America.” The panel includes Chief Judge Robert Katzmann (U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, New York), Juan Osuna (Director, Executive Office for Immigration Review, Department of Justice) and Raha Jorjani (Office of the Alameda County Public Defender, Oakland, CA).
