ABOUT THE ABA AND THE SECTION

The American Bar Association (ABA) is a voluntary membership association of more than 354,000 lawyers—representing about half of the practicing lawyers in the United States—and is the world’s largest professional, voluntary membership association.

The Section of International Law (ABA International) is one of 22 sections within the ABA and has almost 25,000 members worldwide, including a significant percentage of members who are U.S. lawyers practicing abroad as well as non-U.S. lawyers. The Section’s purpose is to serve its members through:

- promoting interest, activity and research in international and comparative law and related areas;
- diffusing knowledge thereof among members of the legal profession and others;
- formulating professional opinions thereon;
- promoting professional relationships with lawyers similarly engaged in foreign countries; and
- implementing Goal IV of the Association, “to advance the rule of law in the world.”

ABA International is the only section of the ABA that focuses on the full range of international legal issues, ranging from public and private international law, to cross-border transactions and disputes, to the regulation of international trade and development, to foreign law. Due to the growing and already immense scope of international law and institutions, we often work with other ABA sections and entities, numerous bar associations abroad (particularly national and local bar associations outside the United States), and a variety of international institutions and organizations.

Members of ABA International are predominantly lawyers in private practice, including substantial numbers of corporate counsel, government and NGO lawyers, law school deans and professors, human rights activists, law students, and LL.M. candidates. Lawyers who are not licensed to practice in the United States may join the American Bar Association and ABA International, and such lawyers are eligible to hold any position in the Section up to and including Section Chair.

As an ABA International member, you can get involved in any of the more than 60 committees and task forces that annually produce CLE seminars, listserv communications and discussions, ABA policy recommendations, and publications that can help advance your career and serve the legal profession and the public.
