“Through the Looking Glass: Are Medicare and Medicaid Provider Agreements Contracts? And Why Do People Care?” Healthcare bankruptcy cases come at a steady stream, and frequently some of the most important assets being transferred are the Medicare and Medicaid Provider Agreements. Although usually bankruptcy courts deal with these agreements as executory contracts, there is binding precedent at the circuit court level that they are not contracts at all. What is most unusual is that the federal government regularly argues outside of bankruptcy that the Medicare Provider Agreement is not a contract, but inside of bankruptcy argues the opposite. State governments argue that the Medicaid Provider Agreement is a contract, but that the providers have no property rights in the agreement. Can all of these arguments be correct? And what are the practical implications of how the agreements are treated, and solutions for dealing with these important assets.

Chapter 11 debtors must pay a quarterly fee based on the amount of disbursements they make. Effective January 1, 2018 the maximum fee was increased from $30,000 for disbursements over $30 million per quarter, to 1% of quarterly disbursement over $1 million, capped at $250,000. Thus, a debtor that has disbursements of $10 million per quarter would see their fees increase from $13,000, under prior rules, to $100,000. This fee increase will disproportionately affect middle market debtors, which are reliant on operating income and owner-operators to survive the bankruptcy process. This program will explore the fee increase and what can be done judicially or legislatively to make the bankruptcy process more affordable and efficient.

This is a 2-hour program focused on electronic discovery and sanctions issues presented in a Law & Order’esque story format. Panelists, including one or more presiding judges, lawyers representing each side of the case, a fact witness, and competing technical/forensic experts will act out the storyline, pausing at designated intervals to drop character and inject commentary. The story will be based on a hypothetical federal lawsuit and will track the progression of the lawsuit in the trial court from the initial Rule 26(f) conference, to a Rule 16 scheduling hearing before a judge, a hearing on an early motion to compel and for sanctions relating to the withholding of ESI, another hearing on a related motion for sanctions for deposition misconduct, an evidentiary hearing on a pretrial motion for Rule 37(e)(2) sanctions for failure to preserve ESI, and ultimately to a mock sidebar at trial because a witness or attorney mentioned an issue or evidence precluded by the Court’s earlier sanctions rulings. The first hour will focus on graduated levels of conduct warranting sanctions from the Rule 26(f) conference through the discovery motions practice, seeking to educate the audience as to what conduct is sanctionable versus conduct that may be obnoxious but falls short of being sanctionable. The second hour will focus on how sanctionable discovery conduct concerning ESI is addressed under the current version of Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(e) (1)-(2) in the pretrial sanctions hearing and during the mock sidebar at trial. The program will be structured to allow current BCRs to share their reactions to the scripted presentations and the presiding judges’ rulings from the bench.

When a company has a potential regulatory issue, when and how should it be disclosed, and to whom? Disclosures to regulators and in SEC filings, and consumer notifications of remediation efforts, often create challenges because investigations and examinations are confidential, and contractual rights may either limit or require disclosure. Institutions must also balance ensuring they maintain trust with their regulators, shareholders, and customers. Come hear our panelists give their opinions on when and how to self-disclose issues—and to whom—through a series of real-world scenarios.
