All things have a beginning, middle and end. This crisis will end. But we don’t know when, and we don’t know what it will look like or what it will require. The last panel discussion will be a capstone of the first round of the ABA Forum on Construction Law’s Leadership Roundtable series, and will discuss how construction stakeholders should prepare for resuming construction in the new normal. If safety requires less in-person collaboration, what other changes will the market sectors need to make to get their respective jobs done? What types of claims may arise and how can we best mitigate potential claims now? This session will be forward-looking, not only anticipating risks, but also outlining potential opportunities to improve processes and protocol.

Our program will feature a discussion of how A/E firms have adapted operations to accomplish project goals while maintaining safety and social distancing throughout the workforce, i.e. What firms need to do to “design for distance”. Our Panel will also address current and future market conditions, and how and why design and design standards may change to meet the new challenges presented by COVID-19. Many businesses have invested heavily in renovations to create large, open spaces with few offices. Upon returning to offices firms will likely need to be distant for some time.
