Due Process Issues
Facing the U.S. Immigration Courts

Immigration Courts, administrative courts housed within the Department of Justice, face a crushing growing backlog at a time when immigration policy is a top political issue. Justice Department changes adopted in the past two years have raised due process questions about the Immigration Courts. This panel will review the scope of the measures, the status of their implementation, pending court challenges, and proposals for restructuring the Immigration judiciary by creation of an Article I Immigration Court.
