9:00 a.m. – 10:00 a.m. The Gig Economy: How Labor and Employment Law Is Adapting to the New Worker
As alternative work arrangements are becoming more common, governments around the world are reviewing current policies to determine who should be covered by labor and employment laws. From Uber and Lyft platforms to the increasing number of homeworkers made possible by new technology, national and local authorities are grappling with important questions regarding safety and health, minimum wage overtime pay, discrimination and the right to form unions. How are these bodies determining who should be covered under the myriad of employment and labor laws, and what changes, if any, should be made?
10:00 a.m. – 10:15 a.m. Refreshment Break (Posadas Foyer)

10:15 a.m. – 11:15 a.m. Immigration, Human Trafficking and Other Areas of Special Concern

9:45 a.m. – 10:45 a.m.  Trends in International Executive Employment Agreements including Compensation and Equity Issues and Restrictive Covenants
The demand for internationally mobile senior executive talent is ever increasing. Senior executives are more willing than ever to relocate themselves and their family for the right role and package, and multinational employers are constantly looking for new ways to attract and retain that executive talent and to closely restrict the executive’s ability to move on to competitors wherever they may be based around the world. This wide-reaching panel will consider the latest key provisions, protections and innovations (and their likely enforceability or otherwise) being adopted around the world by multinational employers and internationally mobile executives in their contract and equity negotiations, their international transfers and in their voluntary and involuntary exits, including to join global competitors.

Moderator: Wendi S. Lazar, Outten & Golden, LLP, New York, NY

11:00 a.m. – 12:00 noon  The Impact of Brexit on International Employers and Their Internationally Mobile Workforces
Brexit is a watershed moment for the UK that potentially will have a huge impact on employers, particularly those with an international presence and a mobile workforce. What is the impact on multinational employers with UK operations employing overseas staff there? What will be the ability for UK employees to carry out work abroad? Will labor and employment laws in the UK change significantly to become less regulated compared to the EU? Will employee data protection be affected by Brexit? What changes might need to be made to employment contracts and other documentation? Given the current uncertainty, this panel will consider the steps that employers, employees and unions should be considering now to prepare for the different eventualities of Brexit in its eventual final form.

Moderator: Marcia Longdon, Kingsley Napley LLP, London, UK
12:00 noon – 1:00 p.m. Internal Employment and Related Regulatory and Criminal Aspects of International Anti-Bribery and Corruption, and Financial Investigations

Panelists will consider the common employment, regulatory and criminal issues that arise for corporates, employees and unions, and for labor and employment lawyers who advise them in investigations with international criminal and regulatory aspects. In light of unprecedented international cooperation between enforcement agencies and the increase in both extra-territorial and corporate liability for criminal and regulatory breaches, this discussion will consider a wide-range of issues including developments of which international labor and employment lawyers need to be aware in legal professional privilege, corporate self-reporting, whistleblowing reforms and questions of professional ethics in investigations. Key questions will include how to assess the hierarchy of risks, how to combine foreign legal counsel in a coherent team, and best investigatory practice to gather evidence and preserve reputations.

9:15 a.m. – 10:30 a.m. The Age Conflict: Aging Workforces, Increased Retirement Ages Versus the Rising Numbers of the Young Unemployed

The aging workforce, Millennial job hopping, and an increasing number of young unemployed present challenges for employers around the globe. In the U.S. alone, ten thousand Baby Boomers turn 65 every day, and this is a trend that will continue until 2030. Many organizations are shifting their attitudes toward older workers as a result, but how are these changes impacting the workplace? This panel will examine the trends in various countries and varying experiences, together with underlying contributing factors, and steps that employers are considering and taking to meet these challenges, as well as what these developments mean for workers.

Mathilde Houet-Weil, Weil & Associés, Paris, France
Cannabis’ legalization progression in North America remains directly in contradiction to U.S. federal law where it is still 100% illegal. As a result, the grounds of inadmissibility (use, possession and distribution) to the U.S. is playing havoc on both employers and workers most notably when crossing the U.S. – Canada border. This is made even more acute by the positions being adopted by the U.S. and its governing agencies. In addition, many other foreign countries have legislated on this issue and, most recently, Canada in 2018 and Uruguay in 2013. Aside from this, Argentina Brazil and Chile, just to name a few South American countries, have passed laws dealing with medical and/or recreational use of cannabis and the issues that have arisen between jurisdictions having very different laws in this area. The panel will provide an overview of the state of the law in their jurisdictions while providing insight regarding the problems faced by employers, employees and others when travelling on both business and/or leisure.
