

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION

ADOPTED BY THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES

AUGUST 3-4, 2009

RECOMMENDATION

RESOLVED, That the American Bar Association adopts the black letter (and introduction and commentary) Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads, dated August 2009.

EIGHT GUIDELINES OF PUBLIC DEFENSE
RELATED TO EXCESSIVE WORKLOADS

August 2009

Introduction

The American Bar Association (ABA) has declared the achievement of quality representation as the objective for those who furnish defense services for persons charged in criminal and juvenile delinquency cases who cannot afford a lawyer. This goal is not achievable, however, when the lawyers providing the defense representation have too many cases, which frequently occurs throughout the United States. This was emphasized in the report of the ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants published in 2004, Gideon's Broken Promise: America's Continuing Quest for Equal Justice, available at www.indigentdefense.org. Additionally, in 2009, two national studies concerned with indigent defense documented the enormous caseloads of many of the lawyers who provide representation of the indigent and the crucial importance of addressing the problem.¹

In 2006, the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility issued its first ever ethics opinion concerning the obligations of lawyers, burdened with excessive caseloads, who provide indigent defense representation.² The opinion made clear that there are “no exceptions” for lawyers who represent indigent clients, i.e., all lawyers have a duty to furnish “competent” and “diligent” service, as required by rules of professional conduct.³

Although Formal Opinion 06-441 set forth some of the steps that those providing defense services should take when faced with excessive caseloads, neither the ethics opinion nor ABA Standards for Criminal Justice contain the kind of detailed action plan, set forth in these Guidelines, to which those providing public defense should adhere as they seek to comply with their professional responsibilities. Thus, Guideline 1 urges the management of public defense programs to assess whether excessive workloads are preventing their lawyers from fulfilling performance obligations; and Guidelines 2, 3, and 4 relate to the need for continuous supervision and monitoring of workloads, training of lawyers respecting their ethical duty when confronted with excessive workloads, and the need for management to determine if excessive workloads exist. Guidelines 5 through 8 address the range of options that public defense providers and their lawyers should consider when excessive workloads are present. As set forth in Guideline 6, depending upon the circumstances, it may be necessary for those providing public defense to seek redress in the courts, but other choices may be available, as suggested in Guideline 5, before this step is required.

These Guidelines are intended for the use of public defense programs and for lawyers who provide the representation, when they are confronted with too many persons to represent and are thus prevented from discharging their responsibilities under professional conduct rules. In addition, because these Guidelines contain important considerations for those responsible for indigent defense services, they should be valuable to a number of other audiences, including members of boards and commissions that oversee public defense representation, policymakers responsible for funding indigent defense, and judges who are called upon to address the caseload concerns of those who provide public defense services. Since these Guidelines relate directly to the fair, impartial, and effective administration of justice in our courts, they also should be of special interest to bar leaders, as well as to the legal profession and to the public.

Guidelines with Comments

1. The Public Defense Provider avoids excessive lawyer workloads and the adverse impact that such workloads have on providing quality legal representation to all clients. In determining whether these objectives are being achieved, the Provider considers whether the performance obligations of lawyers who represent indigent clients are being fulfilled, such as:

- whether sufficient time is devoted to interviewing and counseling clients;
- whether prompt interviews are conducted of detained clients and of those who are released from custody;
- whether pretrial release of incarcerated clients is sought;
- whether representation is continuously provided by the same lawyer from initial court appearance through trial, sentencing, or dismissal;
- whether necessary investigations are conducted;
- whether formal and informal discovery from the prosecution is pursued;
- whether sufficient legal research is undertaken;
- whether sufficient preparations are made for pretrial hearings and trials; and
- whether sufficient preparations are made for hearings at which clients are sentenced.

Comment

These Guidelines use “Public Defense Provider” or “Provider” to refer to public defender agencies and to programs that furnish assigned lawyers and contract lawyers. The words “lawyer” and “lawyers” refer to members of the bar employed by a defender agency, and those in private practice who accept appointments to cases for a fee or provide defense representation pursuant to contracts. The ABA long ago recognized the importance of indigent defense systems including “the active and substantial participation of the private bar...” provided “through a coordinated assigned-counsel system” and also perhaps including “contracts for services.”⁴ In addition to covering all providers of defense services, these Guidelines are intended to apply both to adult and juvenile public defense systems. The objective of furnishing “quality legal representation” is American Bar Association policy related to indigent defense services.⁵ This goal is consistent with the ABA’s Model Rules of Professional Conduct, which require that “competent representation” be provided consisting of “the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation.”⁶ However, if workloads are excessive, neither competent nor quality representation is possible. As stated in the ABA’s Model Rules, “[a] lawyer’s workload must be controlled so that each matter can be handled competently.”⁷ In addition, it has been successfully argued that an excessive number of cases create a concurrent conflict of interest, as a lawyer is forced to choose among the interests of various clients, depriving at least some, if not all clients, of competent and diligent defense services.⁸ The responsibilities of defense lawyers are contained in performance standards⁹ and in professional responsibility rules governing the conduct of lawyers in all cases.¹⁰

When defense lawyers fail to discharge the kinds of fundamental obligations contained in this Guideline, it is frequently because they have excessive workloads. For example, the failure of lawyers to interview clients thoroughly soon after representation begins and in advance of court proceedings, as necessary, is often due to excessive workloads.¹¹ When Public Defense Providers rely upon “horizontal” systems of representation, in which multiple lawyers represent the client at different stages of a case, and lawyers often stand in for one another at court proceedings, it is usually because there are too many cases for which the

A portion of the language last quoted is from ABA MODEL RULE R. 1.7 (a)(2).

⁹ The most comprehensive and authoritative standards respecting the obligations of defense lawyers in criminal cases have been developed by the National Legal Aid and Defender Association. See PERFORMANCE GUIDELINES FOR CRIMINAL DEFENSE REPRESENTATION (4th Printing)(National Legal Aid and Defender Ass’n 2006). Important defense obligations also are contained in ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE, DEFENSE FUNCTION STANDARDS)(3rd ed. 1993)[hereinafter ABA DEFENSE FUNCTION].

Provider is responsible.¹² If written motions are not filed, legal research not conducted, and legal memoranda not filed with the court, the lawyers most likely have an excessive workload. Similarly, excessive workloads may be the reason that crime scenes are not visited in cases where it might be useful to do so. Besides the performance obligations listed in Guideline 1, there are other indicia of excessive workloads, such as a lack of time for lawyers to participate in defense training programs, the need for which is addressed in Guideline 3 and the accompanying commentary.

2. The Public Defense Provider has a supervision program that continuously monitors the workloads of its lawyers to assure that all essential tasks on behalf of clients, such as those specified in Guideline 1, are performed.

Comment

This Guideline is derived from the ABA Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System and emphasizes the critical relationship between supervision and workloads. The ABA Ten Principles require that “workload[s]...[be] controlled” and that lawyers be “supervised and systematically reviewed for quality and efficiency according to nationally and locally adopted standards.”¹³ “Workload,” as explained in the ABA Ten Principles, refers to “caseload adjusted by factors such as case complexity, support services, and an attorney’s nonrepresentational duties.”¹⁴ The need for such oversight is just as important in programs that use assigned lawyers and contract lawyers as it is in public defender offices. When lawyers have a private practice in addition to their indigent defense representation, the extent of their private practice also must be considered in determining whether their workload is reasonable.¹⁵ This applies to part-time public defenders, assigned lawyers, and contract lawyers.

¹² “Counsel initially provided should continue to represent the defendant throughout the trial court proceedings...” ABA PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES, supra note 4, Std. 5-6.2. See also ABA TEN PRINCIPLES, supra note 5, Principle 7: “The same attorney continuously represents the client until completion of the case.” These ABA policy statements do not preclude one or more lawyers with special expertise providing assistance to the lawyer originally assigned to provide representation, and such practices do not necessarily reflect excessive defense workloads.

¹³ ABA TEN PRINCIPLES, supra note 5, at Principles 5 and 10.

¹⁴ Id. at Commentary to Principle 5.

¹⁵ The Massachusetts Committee on Public Counsel Services makes extensive use of private lawyers and seeks to monitor the quality of representation they provide. See JUSTICE DENIED, supra note 1, at 194, n. 52. However, there are few public defense programs that monitor the private caseloads of assigned lawyers or contract lawyers to determine whether these caseloads might interfere with the provision of quality legal representation. But see Wash Rev. Code § 10.1-01.050 (2008): “Each individual or organization that contracts to perform public defense services for a county or city shall report...hours billed for nonpublic defense legal services in the previous calendar year, including number and types of private cases.”

REVISED 119

The ABA endorses complete independence of the defense function, in which the judiciary is neither involved in the selection of counsel nor in their supervision.¹⁶ This call for independence applies to public defender programs, as well as to indigent defense programs that furnish private assigned counsel¹⁷ and legal representation through contracts.¹⁸ Accordingly, the supervision called for under this Guideline is to be provided by seasoned lawyers who are experienced indigent defense practitioners and who act within a management structure that is independent of the judicial, executive and legislative branches of government.

Unless there is supervision of lawyer performance at regular intervals, reasonable workloads and quality representation are not likely to be achieved. Although variations in approach may be called for depending on the kinds of cases represented by the lawyer (e.g., misdemeanor, felony, juvenile, capital, appellate, post-conviction cases) and the lawyer's level of experience, supervision normally requires (1) that meetings be held between an experienced lawyer supervisor and the lawyer being supervised; (2) that the work on cases represented by the supervisee be thoroughly reviewed through case reviews, mock presentations or other thorough reviews; (3) that the lawyer supervisor reviews selected files of the supervisee; (4) that selected court documents prepared by the supervisee be reviewed; (5) that periodic court observations of the supervisee's representation of clients be conducted; and (6) that the number of cases represented by the supervisee, as well as their complexity and likely time commitments, be carefully assessed. In overseeing the work of those providing public defense services, it is important that supervisors have access to data through a management information system, which shows the lawyer's current caseload, the status of cases represented by the lawyer, and other important relevant data.¹⁹

3. The Public Defense Provider trains its lawyers in the professional and ethical responsibilities of representing clients, including the duty of lawyers to inform appropriate persons within the Public Defense Provider program when they believe their workload is unreasonable.

¹⁶ See infra note 54, which contains language from ABA PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES, supra note 4, dealing with the independence of the defense function.

¹⁷ See also ABA PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES, supra note 4, Std. 5-2.1.

¹⁸ See id. at Std. 5-3.2 (b).

¹⁹ The National Right to Counsel Committee recommends that systems of indigent defense establish "[u]niform definitions of a case and a continuous uniform case reporting system...for all criminal and juvenile cases. This system should provide continuous data that accurately contains the number of new appointments by case type, the number of new dispositions by case type, and the number of pending cases." JUSTICE DENIED, supra note 1, Recommendation 11, at 199. See also La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 15-148 (B)(1) Supp. 2009), which requires the state's public defender agency to establish a uniform case reporting system, including data pertaining to workload.

Comment

The requirement of training for lawyers who provide public defense representation is well established ABA policy.²⁰ This Guideline emphasizes a particular subject area in which Public Defense Providers have an obligation to provide training. Lawyers who provide defense services need to be aware of their ethical responsibilities to provide “competent” and “diligent” representation, as required by rules of professional conduct,²¹ as well as performance standards that will enable them to fulfill those duties. In addition, lawyers should be instructed that they have a responsibility to inform appropriate supervisors and/or managers within the Provider program when they believe their workload is preventing or soon will prevent them from complying with professional conduct rules.²² This is especially important because there is an understandable reluctance of public defense lawyers to report to those in charge that they either are not, or may not, be providing services consistent with their ethical duties and performance standards. Despite such reluctance, defense lawyers need to make regular personal assessments of their workload to determine whether it is reasonable, whether they are performing the tasks necessary in order to be competent and diligent on behalf of their clients, and whether they need to communicate concerns about their workload to their supervisor. In discussing the ABA Model Rules and their application to excessive public defense caseloads, the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility has explained that lawyers have a duty to inform their supervisors, the heads of defense programs, and, if applicable, the governing board of the Provider when lawyers believe that they have an excessive number of cases.²³ Conversely, it is important that Providers not take retaliatory action against lawyers who, in good faith, express concerns about their workloads.

4. Persons in Public Defense Provider programs who have management responsibilities determine, either on their own initiative or in response to workload concerns expressed by their lawyers, whether excessive lawyer workloads are present.

²⁰ See ABA PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES, supra note 4, Std. 5-1.5; ABA TEN PRINCIPLES, supra note 5, Principles 6 and 9.

²¹ See ABA MODEL RULES, supra note 3, R 1.1., 1.3.

²² The ABA Model Rules contemplate that issues respecting the discharge of professional duties will be brought to the attention of supervisors: “A subordinate lawyer does not violate the Rules of Professional Conduct if that lawyer acts in accordance with a supervisory lawyer’s reasonable resolution of an arguable question of professional responsibility.” ABA MODEL RULES, supra note 3, R. 5.2 (b). See also ABA Formal Op. 06-441, supra note 2, at 5-6.

²³ “If the supervisor fails to provide appropriate assistance or relief, the lawyer should continue to advance up the chain of command within the office until relief is obtained or the lawyer has reached and requested assistance or relief from the head of the public defender’s office.... Such further action might include: if relief is not obtained from the head of the public defender’s office, appealing to the governing board, if any, of the public defender’s office....” ABA Formal Op 06-441, supra note 2, at 6.

Comment

Public Defense Providers should learn of excessive workloads when lawyers who provide defense services communicate their concerns to management or from the system for monitoring workloads used by the Provider.²⁴ Clearly, management should take seriously concerns about case overload expressed by lawyers since those providing client representation are best able to appreciate the daily pressures of their workload yet may be reluctant to complain. Regardless of the source of concerns, it is incumbent upon management to determine whether the volume of cases, perhaps in combination with other responsibilities, is preventing lawyers from providing “competent” and “diligent” representation and a failure to discharge their responsibilities under applicable performance standards.²⁵ Depending upon the circumstances, supervisors of lawyers and heads of Provider programs are accountable under professional conduct rules when violations of ethical duties are committed by subordinate lawyers for whom they are responsible.²⁶ However, when a lawyer and supervisor disagree about whether the lawyer’s workload is excessive, the decision of the supervisor is controlling if it is a “reasonable resolution of an

²⁴ Client complaints may also be an indication that representation is inadequate due to excessive workloads. See, e.g., NAT’L LEGAL AID AND DEFENDER ASS’N, GUIDELINES FOR LEGAL DEFENSE SYSTEMS IN THE UNITED STATES: REPORT OF THE NATIONAL STUDY COMMISSION ON DEFENSE SERVICES 405 (1976).

²⁵ “As an essential first step, the supervisor must monitor the workloads of subordinate lawyers to ensure that the workload of each lawyer is appropriate. This involves consideration of the type and complexity of cases being handled by each lawyer; the experience and ability of each lawyer; the resources available to support her; and any non-representational responsibilities assigned to the subordinate lawyers.” ABA Formal Op 06-441, supra note 2, at 7. A supervisor’s assessment of the workloads of subordinate lawyers will be significantly aided if an adequate management information system is established, as noted in the Comment to Guideline 2 supra. As recognized in the ABA’s ethics opinion, the extent of support staff (e.g., investigators, social workers, and paralegals) to assist lawyers impacts the number of persons that a lawyer can represent. When adequate support personnel are lacking or if they have excessive caseloads, it is important for the Provider to seek additional personnel.

²⁶ “A lawyer shall be responsible for another lawyer’s violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct if: (1) the lawyer orders or, with knowledge of the specific conduct, ratifies the conduct involved; or (2) the lawyer is a partner or has comparable managerial authority in the law firm in which the other lawyer practices, or has direct supervisory authority over the other lawyer, and knows of the conduct at a time when its consequences can be avoided or mitigated but fails to take reasonable remedial action.” ABA MODEL RULES, supra note 3, R. 5.1 (c). “Firm” or “law firm” denotes...lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization.” Id. at R. 1.0 Terminology. Responsibility for lawyer conduct may also extend to lawyer members of governing boards of Public Defense Providers.

arguable question of professional duty.”²⁷ Where the resolution of the supervisor is not reasonable, the lawyer must take further action.²⁸

Consistent with prior ABA policy, these Guidelines do not endorse specific numerical caseload standards, except to reiterate a statement contained in the commentary to existing principles approved by the ABA: “National caseload standards should in no event be exceeded.”²⁹ This statement refers to numerical annual caseload limits published in a 1973 national report.³⁰ As noted by the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility, while these standards “may be considered, they are not the sole factor in determining whether a workload is excessive. Such a determination depends not only the number of cases, but also on such factors as case complexity, the availability of support services, the lawyer’s experience and ability, and the lawyer’s nonrepresentational duties.”³¹ Thus, while the ABA has not endorsed specific caseload numbers, except to the limited extent discussed above, the routine failure to fulfill performance obligations like those listed in Guideline 1, usually indicates that lawyers have excessive workloads.

5. Public Defense Providers consider taking prompt actions such as the following to avoid workloads that either are or are about to become excessive:

- Providing additional resources to assist the affected lawyers;
- Curtailing new case assignments to the affected lawyers;
- Reassigning cases to different lawyers within the defense program, with court approval, if necessary;

²⁷ See ABA MODEL RULES, supra note 3, R. 5.2 (b), quoted in note 19 supra.

²⁹ ABA TEN PRINCIPLES, supra note 5, Commentary to Principle 5, at 2.

³⁰ “In its report on the Courts, the Commission [National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals] recommended the following maximum annual caseloads for a public defender office, i.e., on average, the lawyers in the office should not exceed, per year, more than 150 felonies; 400 misdemeanors; 200 juvenile court cases; 200 mental health cases; or 25 appeals.” JUSTICE DENIED, supra note 1, at 66. As noted in JUSTICE DENIED, these caseload numbers are 35 years old, the numbers were never “empirically based,” and were intended “for a public defender’s office, not necessarily for each individual attorney in that office.” Id. In fact, the Commission warned of the “dangers of proposing any national guidelines.” Id. The American Council of Chief Defenders, a unit of the National Legal Aid and Defender Association comprised of the heads of defender programs in the United States, also has urged that the caseload numbers contained in the 1973 Commission report not be exceeded. See American Council of Chief Defenders Statement on Caseloads and Workloads, August 24, 2007. Some state and local governments have set limits on the number of cases that defense lawyers can handle on an annual basis. See infra note 37.

- Arranging for some cases to be assigned to private lawyers in return for reasonable compensation for their services;
- Urging prosecutors not to initiate criminal prosecutions when civil remedies are adequate to address conduct and public safety does not require prosecution;
- Seeking emergency resources to deal with excessive workloads or exemptions from funding reductions;
- Negotiating formal and informal arrangements with courts or other appointing authorities respecting case assignments; and
- Notifying courts or other appointing authorities that the Provider is unavailable to accept additional appointments.

Comment

Some of the most important ways in which a Provider may be able to reduce excessive lawyer workloads are listed in this Guideline. When workloads have been determined to be excessive, the steps suggested will be appropriate to pursue if they can be quickly achieved. However, if the steps will take a good deal of time to achieve, they will likely be appropriate to pursue only in advance of the time that workloads actually have become excessive. In other words, once workloads are determined to be excessive, a Provider must be able to achieve immediate relief; when this is not possible, the Provider must seek relief as set forth in Guideline 6.

This Guideline is based on the assumption that judges are appointing either the Public Defense Provider or its lawyers to the cases of indigent clients. In jurisdictions in which the Provider is not appointed by judges or court representatives, but instead clients are simply referred to the defense program, the Provider is required to decline representation if acceptance would result in a violation of the rules of professional conduct.³² Providers who continue to accept cases when an excessive workload is present will fail to provide competent and diligent services as required under rules of professional conduct, have an arguable conflict of interest because of the multiple clients competing for their time and attention,³³ and may be unable to fulfill their duties under the Sixth Amendment.³⁴

In the more usual situation in which courts assign cases to the Public Defense Provider, the cooperation of courts may be necessary in order to implement some of the alternatives suggested in this Guideline. One of the most straightforward ways to address excessive ³² “Except as stated in paragraph (c) [where a court orders counsel to proceed with representation], a lawyer shall not represent a client or, where representation has commenced, shall withdraw from the representation of a client if the representation will result in violation of the rules of professional conduct or other law.” ABA MODEL RULES, supra note 3, R. 1.16 (a)(1).

³³ See supra note 8 and accompanying text.

lawyer workloads is for the Provider and judges or other officials to negotiate informal arrangements to suspend or reduce new court assignments, with the understanding that additional cases will be represented by assigned counsel, contract lawyers, or other Provider program. This may not be a feasible alternative, however, if funds are not available to compensate the lawyers.³⁵ It may also be possible to persuade a court to order, or for the funding authority to authorize, that additional resources be provided due either to the complexity of certain types of cases or to one or two particularly time-consuming cases.³⁶ Further, it may be possible to arrange through either contract or legislation a limit on the number and types of cases annually assigned to lawyers.³⁷ In some jurisdictions where courts appoint counsel, it may nevertheless be possible for the Provider simply to notify judges or other officials that lawyers from the defense program are unavailable to accept appointments in all or certain categories of cases for a specified period of time or until further notice. A declaration of “unavailability” has sometimes been used successfully, such as in some counties in California. This approach is seemingly based on the implicit premise that governments, which establish and fund providers of public defense, never intended that the lawyers who furnish the representation would be asked to do so if it meant violating their ethical duties pursuant to professional conduct rules. On the other hand, some Providers may conclude that this

³⁷ The New Hampshire Public Defender, a nonprofit organization that provides defense services, enters into a contract with the state’s Judicial Council that contains caseload limitations and requires the defender program to notify the courts if caseloads are too high so that private lawyers can be appointed. See JUSTICE DENIED, supra note 1, at 168. In Seattle, the City Council has enacted an ordinance that imposes a ceiling on the number of cases to which lawyers may be assigned annually. The ordinance can be accessed on the website of The Defender Association serving Seattle and King County, Washington. See <http://www.defender.org/node/18>. In Massachusetts, legislation authorizes the Committee on Public Counsel Services to establish “standards” that contain “caseload limitation levels” both for private assigned lawyers and public defenders. See Mass. G. L., Chapter 211D, §9 (c) (2009).

approach is either not contemplated by the jurisdiction's statutes³⁸ or is otherwise deemed inappropriate.

In addition to the options listed in this Guideline for dealing with excessive caseloads, there may be other ways in which Public Defense Providers can seek to achieve caseload reductions. For example, two national studies issued in 2009 recommended that legislatures consider reclassifying certain offenses as civil infractions so that the need to provide lawyers is removed, assuming there are not adverse public safety consequences.³⁹ However, if this course is followed, it is important that the possible adverse collateral consequences resulting from a conviction be carefully considered along with any new legislation since a defense lawyer will not be available to counsel the person.⁴⁰ Another alternative that can serve to reduce public defense caseloads is for cases to be diverted from the criminal justice system during the pretrial stage. Depending on the jurisdiction, implementation will require legislation, a change in court rules, or approval of prosecutors.⁴¹

When a Provider cannot reduce excessive lawyer workloads, a motion filed with the court, aimed at stopping case assignments and/or permitting lawyers to withdraw from cases (see Guideline 6 infra), or conceivably the filing of a separate civil action, will be necessary. Regardless of the type of litigation pursued, it is almost certain to be time-consuming, labor intensive, and the results not easily predicted. In addition, speedy resolution of the matter may prove elusive. If a trial court decision is adverse to the Provider, an appeal may be required. If the Provider is successful in the trial court, the state may appeal. Moreover, the trial court may simply fail to render a prompt decision in the matter. Accordingly, every effort should be made to resolve excessive workloads

³⁸ Consider, for example, the law in Colorado pertaining to the Colorado State Public Defender: "The state public defender shall represent as counsel...each indigent person who is under arrest for or charged with committing a felony." Colo. Rev. Stat. § 21-1-103 (2004); "Case overload, lack of resources, and other similar circumstances shall not constitute a conflict of interest." Id. at § 21-2-103. This statute is contrary to rules of professional conduct governing lawyers and with these Guidelines.

³⁹ The National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers has urged that "[o]ffenses that do not involve a significant risk to public safety...be decriminalized" and cites successful examples where this has occurred. See MINOR CRIMES, supra note 1, at 27-8. Similarly, the National Right to Counsel Committee has suggested that "certain non-serious misdemeanors...be reclassified, thereby reducing financial and other pressures on a state's indigent defense system," and also notes examples where this has taken place. See JUSTICE DENIED, supra note 1, at 198.

⁴⁰ "Under these circumstances, to impose harsh collateral consequences of a conviction, like housing limitations, deportation, and employment limitations would be fundamentally unfair." MINOR CRIMES, supra note 1, at 28.

without resort to litigation, which is why the options specified in Guideline 5 are so important.

6. Public Defense Providers or lawyers file motions asking a court to stop the assignment of new cases and to withdraw from current cases, as may be appropriate, when workloads are excessive and other adequate alternatives are unavailable.

Comment

When alternative options for dealing with excessive workloads, such as those listed in Guideline 5, are exhausted, insufficient, or unavailable, the Public Defense Provider is obligated to seek relief from the court. Thus, a court should be asked to stop additional assignments in all or certain types of cases and, if necessary, that lawyers be permitted to withdraw from representation in certain cases. Continued representation in the face of excessive workloads imposes a mandatory duty to take corrective action in order to avoid furnishing legal services in violation of professional conduct rules.⁴² If representation is furnished pursuant to court appointment, withdrawal from representation usually requires judicial approval.⁴³ Because lawyers have as their primary obligation the responsibility to represent the interests of current clients, withdrawals from representation is less preferable than seeking to halt the assignment of new appointments.⁴⁴ Normally, Providers, rather than individual lawyers, will take the initiative and move to suspend new case assignments and, if necessary, move to withdraw from cases since the Provider has the responsibility to monitor lawyer workloads (Guideline 1), determine whether workloads are excessive (Guideline 4), and explore options other than litigation (Guideline 5). If the Public Defense Provider has complied with Guidelines 1 through 4, it should be in an especially strong position to show that its workload is excessive, and its representations regarding workloads should be accepted by the court.⁴⁵ Nevertheless, in making its motion to the court, the Provider may deem it advisable to present statistical data, anecdotal information, as well as other kinds of evidence.⁴⁶ The Provider also may want to enlist the help of a private law firm with expertise in civil litigation that is willing to provide representation on a pro bono basis. There are notable examples in which private firms have volunteered their time and been extremely helpful to Providers in litigating issues related to excessive workloads.⁴⁷ As discussed earlier, an individual lawyer is obliged to take action when there is disagreement with those in charge of the Provider about whether the lawyer has an excessive workload and the lawyer concludes that Provider officials have made an unreasonable decision respecting the matter.⁴⁸

7. When motions to stop the assignment of new cases and to withdraw from cases are filed, Public Defense Providers and lawyers resist judicial directions regarding the management of Public Defense Programs that improperly interfere with their professional and ethical duties in representing their clients.

Comment

The concern that underlies this Guideline relates to the risk that judges confronted with motions to halt the assignment of new cases or to permit lawyers to withdraw from cases will delve inappropriately into the internal operations of Public Defense Providers. While it is appropriate for judges to review motions asking that assignments be stopped and ⁴⁷ The following observation, offered in discussing the role of volunteer lawyers in litigating systemic challenges to indigent defense systems, is also applicable to litigating motions to withdraw and/or to halt additional appointments: “[E]xternal counsel affiliated with law firms, bar associations, or public interest organizations who are willing to provide pro bono representation can make significant contributions. Besides possessing the necessary experience, they are likely to have more time, personnel, and resources than do public defenders to devote to a major systemic challenge. They also are used to conducting extensive discovery, preparing exhibits, and may have funds to retain necessary experts.” Id at 143.

Defense Lawyers, December 2006); and ABA Formal Op 06-441, supra note 2, at 1, 4-6. In 2009, a California appellate court endorsed the approach of the ABA’s ethics opinion: “Under the ABA opinion, a deputy public defender whose excessive workload obstructs his or her ability to provide effective assistance to a particular client should, with supervisory approval, attempt to reduce the caseload, as by transferring cases to another lawyer with a lesser caseload. If the deputy public defender is unable to obtain relief in that manner, the ABA opinion provides that he or she must ‘file a motion with the trial court requesting permission to withdraw from a sufficient number of cases to allow the provision of competent and diligent representation to the remaining clients.’... The conduct prescribed by the ABA Opinion, which is fully consistent with the California Rules of Professional Conduct, may also be statutorily mandated.” In re Edward S., 173 Cal. App. 4th 387, 413, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 725, 746 (Cal. App. 1st Dist. 2009). This decision cites with approval an earlier California decision, Ligda v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. Rptr. 744, 754 (Cal. Ct. App. 1970) (“[w]hen a public defender reels under a staggering workload, he ... should proceed to place the situation before the judge, who upon a satisfactory showing can relieve him, and order the employment of private counsel at public expense.”) withdrawals from cases are permitted, courts should not undertake to micro-manage the operations of defense programs.⁴⁹

When Providers file motions requesting that assignments be stopped and that withdrawals be permitted, their prayer for relief should be accorded substantial deference because Providers are in the best position to assess the workloads of their lawyers. As the ABA has noted, “[o]nly the lawyers themselves know how much must be done to represent their clients and how much time the preparation is likely to take.”⁵⁰ In discussing a defense lawyer’s claim of conflict of interest in representing co-defendants, the Supreme Court has noted that “attorneys are officers of the court, and ‘when they address the judge solemnly upon a matter before the court, their declarations are virtually made under oath.’”⁵¹ In an accompanying footnote, the Court further declared: “When a considered representation regarding a conflict of interest comes from an officer of the court, it should be given the weight commensurate with the grave penalties risked for misrepresentation.”⁵²

The ABA has recognized that the judiciary needs to ensure that Providers and their lawyers are not forced to accept unreasonable numbers of cases: “Courts should not require individuals or programs to accept caseloads that will lead to the furnishing of representation lacking in quality or to the breach of professional obligations.”⁵³ This

Judges should be especially understanding of the representations of Providers given that the “judiciary plays a central in preserving the principles of justice and the rule of law.” ABA CODE OF JUDICIAL CONDUCT, Preamble (2007). Similarly, prosecutors have a duty “to seek justice ... [and] to reform and improve the administration of criminal justice.” ABA STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE: PROSECUTION FUNCTION STANDARDS, Std.3-1.2 (c), (d) (3rd ed., 1993). However, when a Provider seeks relief in court from an excessive workload, the prosecutor seemingly has a conflict of interest in opposing the Provider’s motion. Not only do the decisions of prosecutors in filing charges against persons directly impact the caseloads of Providers, but the likelihood of successful prosecutions are enhanced if Providers are burdened with excessive caseloads. The adversary system is premised on the assumption that justice is best served when both sides in litigation are adequately funded and have sufficient time to prepare their respective cases.

⁵³ ABA PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES, supra note 4, Std. 5-5.3 (b). Sometimes the problem is not the number of cases, but the pressure placed on defense lawyers to proceed when they have not had sufficient time to prepare. In an Ohio case, a public defender was prepared to represent his client, but asked for a continuance before proceeding to trial because he had just been appointed earlier the same day and lacked sufficient time to interview witnesses. The trial court denied the public defender’s

Guideline is a corollary to the well accepted proposition that defense services should be independent of the judicial and executive branches of government.⁵⁴ Thus, an ABA standard recommends that “[t]he selection of lawyers for specific cases should not be made by the judiciary or elected officials....”⁵⁵ This same standard also urges that the plan for legal representation “guarantee the integrity of the relationship between lawyer and client.”⁵⁶

8. Public Defense Providers or lawyers appeal a court’s refusal to stop the assignment of new cases or a court’s rejection of a motion to withdraw from cases of current clients.

Comment

The ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility has indicated that a trial court’s denial of motions to halt appointments or to withdraw from pending cases should be appealed, if possible.⁵⁷ An appeal or an application for a writ of mandamus or prohibition should properly be regarded as a requirement of “diligence” under professional conduct rules.⁵⁸ However, if a defense motion is rejected and an appeal is not permitted, the Public Defense Provider usually has no choice except to continue to provide representation.⁵⁹ Similarly, if the motion for relief is granted but implementation of the order is stayed pending appeal, the Provider will likely have to continue to provide request for a continuance and held the lawyer in contempt because of his refusal to proceed to trial. In reversing the contempt finding, the court concluded that the trial judge had “improperly placed an administrative objective of controlling the court’s docket above its supervisory imperative of facilitating effective, prepared representation at trial.” State v. Jones, 2008 WL 5428009, at *5 (Ohio App. 2008).

⁵⁴ “The legal representation plan for the jurisdiction should be designed to guarantee the integrity of the relationship between lawyer and client. The plan and the lawyers serving under it should be...subject to judicial supervision only in the same manner and to the same extent as are lawyers in private practice. The selection of lawyers for specific cases should not be made by the judiciary....” ABA PROVIDING DEFENSE SERVICES, supra note 4, at Std. 5-1.3 (a).

⁵⁷ “If the court denies the lawyer’s motion to withdraw, and any available means of appealing such ruling is unsuccessful, the lawyer must continue with the representation while taking whatever steps are feasible to ensure that she will be able to competently and diligently represent the defendant.” ABA Formal Op 06-441, supra note 2, at 1.

⁵⁸ “A lawyer should pursue a matter on behalf of a client...and take whatever lawful and ethical measures are required to vindicate a client’s cause or endeavor. A lawyer must also act with zeal in advocacy upon the client’s behalf.” ABA MODEL RULES, supra note 3, R. 1.3, cmt. 1.

representation.⁶⁰ This places the Provider in an extremely awkward situation since on the one hand those in charge of the defense program have made it clear that, in their professional judgment, caseloads are excessive and the lawyers providing direct client services are being forced to violate their ethical responsibilities, yet relief is unavailable. Accordingly, the Provider should continue to explore non-litigation alternatives (see Guideline 5) while requiring the Provider's lawyers to make a record in their cases, if appropriate, about the lawyers' inability, due to excessive caseloads, to furnish "competent" and "diligent" representation as required by professional conduct rules. The Public Defense Provider should also continue to seek public support from bar associations, community groups, and the media.⁶¹

⁶⁰However, the Provider or lawyer also will likely want to proceed expeditiously in the appellate court to strike the stay or modify the order pending appeal.

⁶¹ "Theoretically, when judges resolve court cases concerning indigent defense reform, it should be irrelevant whether the litigation is covered by print and other news media. Nor should it matter whether prominent persons in the state or community speak publicly in favor of necessary changes in the delivery of indigent defense services. However, the reality is that news reports about problems in indigent defense and strong public support for improvements may make a difference not only when legislatures consider new laws, but also when courts decide difficult cases." Report

Introduction

Throughout the United States, there is a lack of adequate funding to provide legal representation for persons in criminal and juvenile delinquency cases who have a Constitutional right to a lawyer but are unable to afford representation. As a result, public defender agencies and their lawyers are routinely faced with enormous caseloads. Defenders, therefore, are unable to represent their indigent clients effectively as required by the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and from providing competent and diligent representation as required by rules of professional conduct.

The Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads [hereinafter “Guidelines”] contain a well thought out course of action not only for public defender agencies forced to deal with too many cases, but also for other providers of indigent defense services with excessive workloads. These include lawyers who accept appointments to cases as part of an assignment program and lawyers who enter into contracts to provide indigent defense services.

Excessive Caseloads Are a National Problem

The problem of excessive caseloads among public defense providers has been documented in numerous national, state, and local reports over a period of many years. Recently, two national reports on indigent defense services in the United States were published. The first of these was released in April 2009 by the Constitution Project, on behalf of the National Right to Counsel Committee, an independent and diverse group representing all major constituencies of the justice system, i.e., the judiciary, prosecution, police, and the defense. The Committee was organized by the Constitution Project and the National Legal Aid & Defender Association. In its report, the Committee offered the following assessment of public defense caseloads:

Undoubtedly, the most visible sign of inadequate funding is attorneys attempting to provide defense services while carrying astonishingly large caseloads. Frequently, public defenders are asked to represent far too many clients. Sometimes the defenders have well over 100 clients at a time, with many clients charged with serious offenses, and their cases moving quickly through the court system. As a consequence, defense lawyers are constantly forced to violate their oaths as attorneys because their caseloads make it impossible for them to practice law as they are required to do according to the profession’s rules. They cannot interview their clients properly, effectively seek their pretrial release, file appropriate motions, conduct necessary fact investigations, negotiate responsibly with the prosecutor, adequately prepare for hearings, and perform countless other tasks that normally would be undertaken by a lawyer with sufficient time and resources. Yes, the clients have lawyers, but lawyers with crushing caseloads who, through no fault of their own, provide second-rate legal services, simply because it is not humanly possible for them to do otherwise.⁶²

The second recent national study, published in May 2009 by the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, focuses on the problems of indigent defense representation in misdemeanor cases. The report summed up the caseload problems in lower courts this way:

Almost 40 years later, the misdemeanor criminal justice system is rife with the same problems that existed prior to the Argersinger decision.⁶³ Legal representation for indigent defendants is absent in many cases. Even when an attorney is provided to defend a misdemeanor case, crushing workloads make it impossible for many defenders to effectively represent clients. Too often, counsel is unable to spend sufficient time on each of their cases. This forces even the most competent and dedicated attorneys to run afoul of their professional duties. Frequently, judges and prosecutors are complicit in these breaches, pushing defenders to take action with inadequate time, despite knowing that the defense attorney lacks appropriate information about the case and the client.⁶⁴

In 2004, the ABA Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants (SCLAID) issued the Association's most recent national report on indigent defense services. This report, based upon hearings held at four locations across the country during 2003,⁶⁵ commemorated the fortieth anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision in Gideon v. Wainwright.⁶⁶ In referring to the number of cases that public defenders are asked to handle, the report summarized the testimony of numerous witnesses: "[T]he hearings revealed that oftentimes caseloads...[make] it impossible for even the most industrious of lawyers to deliver effective representation in all cases."⁶⁷ Twenty-two years earlier, SCLAID offered a similar assessment of caseloads of those providing public defense services.⁶⁸

ABA Ethics Opinion Dealing with Excessive Caseloads

In 2006, the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility issued Formal Opinion 06-441 concerning the ethical obligations of indigent defense lawyers burdened with excessive caseloads. The opinion made clear that there are “no exceptions” for lawyers who represent indigent clients – all lawyers have a duty to furnish “competent” and “diligent” service, as required by rules of professional conduct. Accordingly, as directed by the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, the opinion admonishes defense programs and lawyers to move to withdraw from cases if they are unable to furnish representation in compliance with their ethical duties. The opinion also advises lawyers that if clients are being assigned through a court appointment system, which is often what occurs in indigent defense, the lawyers should advise the court not to make any new appointments.

Formal Opinion 06-441, therefore, sets forth several basic steps that those providing defense services should take when faced with excessive caseloads. However, the opinion does not contain a detailed action plan to which public defense providers should adhere as they seek to comply with their professional responsibilities. The purpose of the proposed Guidelines is to do just that, as more fully explained below.

ABA Standards and Principles Related to Excessive Caseloads

Much like the ABA’s new ethics opinion concerning indigent defense representation, a detailed plan for dealing with excessive caseloads is lacking in the ABA’s Standards for Criminal Justice and in the ABA Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System. This is understandable since neither these standards nor principles deal with subjects in as much detail as contained in the proposed Guidelines. Thus, a standard in the ABA’s Defense Function Standards simply advises “[d]efense counsel...[not to] carry a workload that, by reason of its excessive size, interferes with the rendering of quality representation, endangers the client’s interest in the speedy disposition of charges, or may lead to the breach of professional obligations.”⁶⁹ Similarly, the ABA’s Providing Defense Services Standards urges indigent defense lawyers with excessive caseloads to “take such steps as may be appropriate to reduce their pending or projected caseloads, including the refusal of further appointments.”⁷⁰ The ABA’s Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System, which is largely based on Providing Defense Services, reads as follows: “Defense counsel’s workload is controlled to permit the rendering of quality representation.”⁷¹

The Eight Guidelines: Why They Are Needed and What They Do

The problem of excessive indigent defense caseloads has become especially acute during the past year due to America’s slumping economy, which has led to more restricted funding for public defense providers. As the recent report of the National Right to Counsel Committee warned, “[i]n the country’s current economic crisis, indigent defense may be further curtailed.... Although troubles in indigent defense have long existed, the need for reform has never been more urgent.”⁷² The proposed Eight Guidelines build upon the ABA’s Formal Opinion 06-411, the ABA’s Criminal Justice Standards, and the ABA’s Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System. Because the Guidelines contain a complete and coherent approach to dealing with excessive defender caseloads, their implementation by indigent defense providers will contribute to important reform at an especially critical time.

Specifically, Guideline 1 advises the management of public defense providers to assess whether excessive workloads are preventing lawyers from fulfilling their performance obligations under nationally accepted standards, as well as complying with professional conduct rules. This first Guideline also offers an important list of factors for public defense providers to consider in deciding whether their caseloads are too high. Guidelines 2, 3, and 4 relate to the need for continuous supervision and monitoring of workloads, training of lawyers respecting their ethical responsibilities when confronted with excessive workloads and the need for management to determine if excessive workloads exist. Guideline 5 sets forth a number of non-litigation alternatives for public defense providers to pursue in an effort to address excessive workloads. Guideline 6 recognizes that if non-litigation alternatives are “unavailable, or been proven to be unsuccessful or inadequate,” those responsible for public defense are obligated to seek formal redress in the courts. Guidelines 7 and 8 deal with important practices to which public defense providers should adhere in challenging their caseloads through litigation.

Conclusion

The proposed Guidelines will enhance the fairness of our nation’s criminal and juvenile courts while enabling lawyers to discharge their duty under the Constitution and also comply with their ethical obligations in accordance with rules of the legal profession. The Guidelines are intended for use by both public defense organizations and their lawyers when they have excessive workloads. In addition, the Guidelines should be valuable to a number of other audiences, including members of boards and commissions that oversee public defense representation, policymakers responsible for funding indigent defense, and judges who are called upon to address the caseload concerns of those who provide public defense services. Moreover, since these Guidelines relate directly to the quality of justice in our courts, they should be of special interest to bar leaders, as well as to the legal profession and to the public.

GENERAL INFORMATION FORM

Submitting Entity: Standing Committee on Legal Aid and Indigent Defendants

Submitted By: Deborah Hankinson, Chair

1. Summary of Recommendation(s).

The proponents ask the House of Delegates to adopt the Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads, which contain essential steps to be taken by those organizations and lawyers who provide criminal defense services for persons in the United States who cannot afford to hire an attorney.

2. Approval by Submitting Entity.

The Recommendation was approved by the Committee on May 6, 2009.

3. Has this or a similar recommendation been submitted to the House or Board previously?

No.

4. What existing Association policies are relevant to this recommendation and how would they be affected by its adoption?

The following Association policies are relevant to this recommendation: ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, Defense Function 5-5.3(b)(3d ed., 1992), ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, Providing Defense Services 5-5.3(b)(3d ed., 1992), and ABA Ten Principles of a Public Defense Delivery System, principle 5. The proposed new policy would expand upon those policies by providing a detailed plan for dealing with excessive caseloads.

5. What urgency exists which requires action at this meeting of the House?

Throughout the United States, there has been a chronic lack of adequate funding to provide legal representation for persons in criminal and juvenile delinquency cases who have a Constitutional right to counsel but are unable to afford a lawyer. As a result, public defender agencies and their attorneys are routinely faced with enormous caseloads. Now, especially in light of the current economic downturn, there is a genuine crisis facing state and local jurisdictions. Defenders, therefore, are unable to represent their indigent clients effectively as required by the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and from providing competent and diligent representation as required by rules of professional conduct.

The proposed Eight Guidelines of Public Defense Related to Excessive Workloads contain a well thought out course of action not only for public defender agencies forced to deal with too many cases, but also for other providers of indigent defense services with excessive workloads.

6. Status of Legislation.

Not applicable.

7. Cost to the Association.
None.

8. Disclosure of Interest.
None.

9. Referrals.
On May 7, 2009, the proposed Recommendation and Report were referred to Chairs and Directors of interested ABA entities and other parties and individuals, specifically to the following entities: Special Committee on Death Penalty Representation (cosponsor); Criminal Justice Section; Individual Rights and Responsibilities Section; Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility; Council on Racial and Ethnic Justice (cosponsor); General Practice, Solo and Small Firm Division; Judicial Division; Standing Committee on Judicial Independence (cosponsor); Section of Litigation; and National Legal Aid and Defender Association. While there has been no formal opposition, the National Legal Aid and Defender Association has indicated concern regarding certain aspects of the Guidelines.
