The Standing Committee on Election Law of the American Bar Association was created in 1973, as a Special Committee, to develop and examine ways to improve the federal electoral process. In 1979, a ten-member Advisory Commission was created consisting of the Chair and Vice-chair of the Federal Election Commission, election law attorneys, and academics. The Standing Committee and its Advisory Commission are nationally recognized election law experts charged with representing the Association’s commitment to ensure that the nation’s election laws are legally sound and drafted to permit the broadest, least restrictive access by Americans to the ballot box.
