

Erika Pinheiro, JD/MPP Candidate, Georgetown Law/Public Policy Institute (2010). Erika is in her final year of a dual law/policy degree program and has an interest in public sector reform in the developing world. She has a background in migration and development; before coming to Georgetown, Erika worked on behalf of immigrants seeking gender-based asylum and relief from deportation in San Francisco, CA. She also interned at the International Organization for Migration in Geneva, Switzerland and with Jananeethi, a legal services organization in Kerala, India. While at Georgetown, Erika worked at the Center for Juvenile Justice Reform and on human rights advocacy projects involving juvenile immigrant gangs and migrants affected by the HIV/AIDS immigration ban. Erika currently resides in Brazil, where she supports litigation concerning juvenile conditions of confinement in Sao Paulo. Erika also acts as a government advisor for the Pernambuco state government's security sector reform project, which seeks to reduce juvenile gang membership and institutional violence in Recife, Brazil.
