Content Guidelines: Print and Online

1. Use Arial font.
2. Place the article title and name(s) of author(s) at the top of the first page. Title should be in bold. Remember the article title should be short and descriptive and should be no more than 10 words or 80 characters long. Titles should not be in all Capital letters. Title Case should be used.
3. Place biographical information at the end of the article in italics. Biographies must be short – one or two sentences. Include the name of your employer or firm and position held. Email address is optional. If past government experience is relevant to the subject of your article, you may mention your prior affiliation. If you have a role in the subject of the article, please indicate that role (e.g., counsel for a party) If you are a professor, include your title, and school.

4. Authors are solely responsible for the content and accuracy of the material.
5. Material is not to be used as self-aggrandizement or self/firm promotions/advertisements.
6. Do not use unnecessary quotations, citations, and other embellishments. The material will not be part of a law journal. Footnotes are prohibited. Citations to authority may be made in the body of text but should be minimized. String cites are not allowed. Internet citations should be limited to those documents that are only available online and to the shortest citation possible that links to the material. To support a theme, the two most prominent citations should suffice without further listing. Obviously, however, you must cite the source of all quotations. Citations should conform to the latest edition of The Uniform System of Citation, published by the Harvard Law Review Association.
7. All Material must be submitted electronically, in Microsoft Word format. See YLD Leadership Portal for where to send material.
8. Copyright - Authors must sign an author agreement upon submission of their articles, using either the Author Agreement for articles to be published for the first-time or the Author Agreement for articles previously published. When submitting an article the author grants the American Bar Association (ABA) an irrevocable option to acquire certain property rights in the article. Signed copyright forms for each author and co-author in an issue must be in the ABA files prior to publication of material. The ABA will not publish an article without a signed agreement.
