STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICI
CURIAE¹

Amici curiae are four civil rights and community health organizations that advocate on behalf of Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities and other low-income, limited English proficient, and immigrant populations. Amici advocate for improved and expanded health care coverage and health care reform to address their needs.

Each amicus provides policy analysis, advocacy, and other services to enhance the access of Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders to affordable health care. Amici also provide services and advocacy to seek justice, equality, and equity in the provision of health care and related services.

Together, amici also oversee and coordinate the efforts of Action for Health Justice, a national collaborative of more than 70 Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander national and local community-based organizations and Federally Qualified Health Centers, many of which join this brief (Appendix A). Action for Health Justice is dedicated to educating, empowering, and enrolling Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders in health coverage under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (the “Affordable Care Act” or the “ACA”).

Specifically, amici are the following:

- Asian & Pacific Islander American Health Forum (“APIAHF”), a national health policy organization committed to ensuring that Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders in the United States have adequate and cost-effective health care. APIAHF’s national policy work focuses on expanding access to health care, improving the quality of health care through cultural competency and language access, increasing research, and improving the collection, reporting, and analysis of data about Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities;
- Association of Asian Pacific Community Health Organizations (“AAPCHO”), a national association of 35 community health centers, including 29 Federally Qualified Health Centers. AAPCHO advocates for the unique and diverse health needs of Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities and the community health providers that serve those needs. AAPCHO advocates for policies and programs that improve the provision of health care services that are community-driven, financially affordable, linguistically accessible, and culturally appropriate;

- Asian Americans Advancing Justice | Los Angeles (“Advancing Justice | LA”), the nation’s largest legal and civil rights organization for Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders. Through direct services, impact litigation, policy advocacy, leadership development, and capacity building, Advancing Justice | LA focuses on the most vulnerable members of Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities. Advancing Justice | LA’s Health Access Project seeks to address the health care needs of low income, limited-English proficient Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders and other similarly-situated communities, to ensure their access to culturally and linguistically appropriate health care services, and to increase their access to quality health care throughout California and the United States;
- Asian Americans Advancing Justice | AAJC (“Advancing Justice | AAJC”), one of the nation’s leading experts on issues of importance to the Asian American community, including affirmative action, anti-Asian violence prevention/race relations, census, immigrant rights, immigration, language access, health care, and voting rights. Advancing Justice | AAJC seeks to ensure that individuals in the Asian American community are not prevented from accessing more affordable health insurance in the Health Insurance Marketplace by tracking barriers to enrollment and addressing instances of language-based discrimination.

In addition, other Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander groups join this brief and are listed in Appendix A.

Because amici are community-based advocacy groups that focus on health care issues, each has a compelling interest in ensuring that the Affordable Care Act applies consistently with Congress's purposes of reducing the number of uninsured Americans and improving the quality of care available to marginalized communities, including Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders. Amici therefore agree with Respondents that the federal subsidies provided through the Affordable Care Act apply regardless of whether a state Exchange was established by the state through its own action, or through the assistance of the federal government on behalf of the state.

These subsidies have had a dramatic impact on millions of people who live in the 34 states that have federally-facilitated Exchanges. If denied these subsidies, many of these people will not be able to buy health insurance and will have to forgo crucial health care. In fact, even those in the 16 states—plus the District of Columbia—that established Exchanges themselves will be negatively affected if federal subsidies are taken away from millions currently insured under the Affordable Care Act. Because the impact of losing federal subsidies would fall disproportionately on people of color, including a significant number of Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders, amici have a strong interest in this case.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Before the Affordable Care Act, many Americans could not afford the health care and health insurance they needed. People of color, including many Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders, disproportionately lacked resources to access affordable health care and thus were less likely to be insured than non-Hispanic white Americans. To address this lack of access, Congress passed the Affordable Care Act to provide affordable health insurance to all Americans. This Court should construe the Affordable Care Act's language consistent with this purpose.

The subsidies in section 36B of the Internal Revenue Code are a key component of Congress's plan to reduce the number of uninsured Americans. Statistics and the testimony of numerous individuals show that these subsidies have enabled millions of previously uninsured or uninsurable individuals of all races and in all states to obtain and afford the health care that they need. This is particularly true for many low-income individuals—especially for those living in states without the Medicaid expansion—whose only affordable option is to purchase health coverage with subsidies. Thus, subsidies have helped achieve Congress’s goal of ensuring that every American has access to quality health care.

If accepted, Petitioners’ argument that the Affordable Care Act did not make subsidies available to individuals who purchased health insurance on a federally-facilitated Exchange would have far-reaching consequences for the entire health insurance system. Millions of people would no longer be able to afford the health insurance they desperately need. Such result would undermine Congress’s purpose in enacting the Affordable Care Act.

This Court should reject Petitioners’ construction because it contradicts the Affordable Care Act’s language and structure. Even if the Affordable Care Act’s language were ambiguous, this Court should reject Petitioners’ argument and should construe the Affordable Care Act consistent with Congress’s purpose and defer to the Treasury Department’s regulatory interpretation.

ARGUMENTI. CONGRESS ENACTED THE AFFORDABLE CARE ACT TO INCREASE ACCESS TO AFFORDABLE HEALTH CARE.

In March 2010, Congress enacted the Affordable Care Act to “increase the number of Americans covered by health insurance and decrease the cost of health care.” Nat’l Fed’n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 132 S. Ct. 2566, 2580 (2012). For the reasons set forth in Respondents’ brief, amici respectfully submit that the language of the Affordable Care Act and the Treasury Department’s regulations under the statute effectuate the Affordable Care Act’s purpose by making subsidies available to all Americans, regardless of whether they live in a state with a federally-facilitated Exchange. Even assuming, however, that the statutory language is ambiguous, or even arguably at odds with the Congressional purpose, the Court should construe the language in accordance with that purpose.

This Court has long held that:

Where the [statutory] words are ambiguous, the judiciary may properly use the legislative history to reach a conclusion. And that method of determining congressional purpose is likewise applicable when the literal words would bring about an end completely at variance with the purpose of the statute.

United States v. Pub. Util. Comm'n of Cal., 345 U.S. 295, 315 (1953). Here, the purpose of the statute, as supported by the legislative history, is to ensure access to affordable health care for all Americans. Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus., 132 S. Ct. at 2580. Congress's purpose was not (as Petitioners argue) just to help individuals living in certain states.

In enacting the Affordable Care Act, Congress recognized that too many Americans were unable to afford quality health care. Congress's concern was well justified.

A. People Of Color, Including Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, And Pacific Islanders, Faced Disparities In Access To Health Care.

Before the Affordable Care Act, many Americans could not access the health care they needed because they did not have health insurance. Approximately 25 percent of all Americans reported that they did not have health insurance at some point in 2010.² Of the people without health insurance, over 80 percent had incomes less than three times the federal poverty level.³

Although lack of health care affected large numbers of Americans regardless of race, Congress recognized that people of color made up a disproportionate number of those unable to access adequate health care. For example, Representative Sheila Jackson Lee explained that “[r]acial and ethnic minorities are often less likely to receive preventive care. Vietnamese women, for example, are half as likely to receive a pap smear, and twice as likely to die from cervical cancer as are Whites.”⁴ She explained that “African Americans, Hispanics, and Native Americans are roughly twice as likely to be uninsured as the rest of the population.”⁵

Congress’s recognition of race-based disparities in health care access is well supported. In 2010, non-Hispanic whites had 71 percent more employer-sponsored health insurance than Latinos and 48 percent more than African Americans.⁶ In 2010, while 16 percent of non-Hispanic white Americans did not have health insurance, approximately 41 percent of Hispanic adults and

26 percent of non-Hispanic black adults were uninsured.⁷

Like other people of color, many Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders were uninsured. There is a wide range of social and economic diversity within Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities, with over 30 different ethnic groups, dozens of distinct languages, and great differences in educational background, immigration history, and ability to speak and understand English. Although approximately 15 percent of Asian Americans overall lacked health insurance,⁸ the percentage of uninsured people was even higher for certain Asian American groups. As many as 65.7 percent of Chinese Americans living in the western United States were uninsured before the implementation of the Affordable Care Act.⁹ Other groups also had significant uninsurance rates—for instance, 14 percent of Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders, including 26 percent of Tongans and 24 percent of Marshallese.¹⁰ Some South Asian groups also had disproportionately high uninsurance rates, such as Bangladeshi (23 percent), Pakistani (23 percent), Southeast Asians, like Cambodians (21 percent), and East Asians, including Koreans (22 percent).¹¹

In addition, high percentages of children, particularly among Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders, were uninsured or underinsured. Approximately 8 percent of Asian American children and 11 percent of Native Hawaiian or Pacific Islander children were uninsured.¹² Among all racial groups, Asian American children had the highest rate of underinsurance, at 28 percent.¹³

Data from the 2008 National Health Interview Survey by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (“CDC”) show that before the Affordable Care Act, Asian Americans were twice as likely as both non-Hispanic whites and African Americans not to have seen a doctor in the past five years, despite being more likely to develop hepatitis, stomach and liver cancer, and other diseases.¹⁴ Certain Asian American subpopulations suffer from greater health disparities. For example, 14 percent of Indian Americans have diabetes, a rate higher than that of all other racial groups.¹⁵ Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders are disproportionately affected by heart disease, cancer, and diabetes.¹⁶

The racial disparity in health care access, at least in significant part, results from disparities in socioeconomic status. As the CDC recognized in 2010, “residents in mostly minority communities continue[d] to have lower socioeconomic status, greater barriers to health care access, and greater risks for, and burden of, disease compared with the general population living in the same county or state.”¹⁷ Lack of insurance, due to financial disparities, means far less access to health care. As many as 87 percent of adult Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders who have health insurance regularly accessed medical care, as compared to only 48 percent of those who were uninsured.¹⁸ Moreover, for many individuals, continuous lack of health care access could exacerbate small health problems so that they become acute and/or chronic. This effect can lead to more detrimental costs to the health system.

Before the Affordable Care Act, economic challenges had a significant effect on access to health care within Asian American, Native Hawaiian and Pacific communities. Although some subgroups of this population enjoy economic success and stability, others struggle with severe poverty. In 2010, approximately 56 percent of all Asian Americans had personal incomes under 400 percent of the Federal Poverty Level.¹⁹ Approximately 11 percent of Asian Americans live below the federal poverty line, a rate which exceeds that of non-Hispanic whites.²⁰

Poverty is even more common among certain Asian American ethnic groups. For example, over one in four Hmong Americans (an ethnic group from China, Vietnam, Laos, and Thailand) lives below the federal poverty line, and roughly one in five Cambodian and Bangladeshi Americans lives in poverty, a rate that well exceeds the national average.²¹

Poverty rates are even higher for Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander children and seniors. Nearly one-third of Hmong American children live in poverty, and about one-fifth of Korean, Hmong, Cambodian, and Laotian American seniors live in poverty.²² Hmong, Bangladeshi and Cambodian American communities have the highest proportion of seniors and children who live in poverty.²³

Further, 15.1 percent of Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders have incomes at the poverty line.²⁴ Across multiple measures of income, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders in the United States fare worse than average. They have a higher poverty rate than the average rate for Americans (15 percent versus 14 percent), a greater proportion of low-income people (35 percent versus 32 percent), and a lower income per capita ($19,051 versus $27,334).²⁵ This means “[a]bout 140,000 Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders live in poverty and nearly 330,000 are low-income.”²⁶ As a result, “[a]bout 18 percent of Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders did not see a doctor because of cost in 2012, a rate higher than average (16%).”²⁷

The fact that many Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders suffer from health disparities, including high uninsured rates and high rates of certain health conditions, high poverty rates, and lower per-capita incomes, coupled with the fact that 23 states have not expanded their Medicaid programs,²⁸ highlights the importance of the federal subsidies for these communities.

B. Those Who Lack Access To Affordable Health Care Often Suffer Adverse Health Care Consequences.

In enacting the Affordable Care Act, Congress recognized that the inability to obtain adequate insurance causes many individuals to make difficult choices and suffer unique, and often heartbreaking, consequences. As Representative Alcee Hastings explained, “If this bill passes, it will mean that the 46 million Americans who have zero health care or who cannot afford what they do have, or who suffer at the mercy of chronic illnesses like diabetes, will finally be able to see a doctor.”²⁹ He said that the Affordable Care Act would mean that these Americans would “no longer have to choose between buying food and purchasing their medicine.”³⁰

The statistics discussed above, as well as the experiences of many individuals, demonstrate the real choices that the most vulnerable Americans faced before the Affordable Care Act. Loyal R., a 32-year-old program manager at a nonprofit in Phoenix, Arizona, who is of Syriac, Chaldean, and Armenian descent, is all too familiar with this choice. Before the Affordable Care Act, she could not afford health insurance. She skipped preventive care and even avoided seeing a doctor when she fell ill with a bronchitis-like condition. At the time, her income went to her rent and utilities, and her insurance premium would have had to come out of her budget for food. She says, “At the time, I couldn’t skip paying rent, I couldn’t skip paying utilities, but I could skip meals. If it weren’t for tax subsidies, [to afford insurance,] I wouldn’t have been able to eat.”³¹

Similarly, Sydney K. is a 42-year-old married mother of two in California. Without subsidies, she says:

“[I w]ould have to pay over $500/month for health insurance. . . . I would not be able to purchase health insurance and would not know what to do. I would have to choose between paying bills or health insurance. . . . I would not be able to afford the medication and treatments to manage my condition, so I would not be able to care for my family and see them grow. . . . I need to stay healthy for my family, and having access to subsidies makes it affordable.”³²

Before the Affordable Care Act, people across all American communities suffered dire consequences without adequate health care. For example:

- Omar Chavez described avoiding going to the doctor before he had health insurance. He said, “After lunch with a friend one day, my heart rate suddenly shot up, I started sweating, and everything began spinning. My friend—a volunteer firefighter—thought I might be having a heart attack or stroke. He took me to the emergency room, but I refused to go in—I waited in the parking lot for 20 minutes to see if the symptoms went away. Fortunately, it was a false alarm. But at the age of 32, I literally gambled with my life because I worried about the cost of the ER!”³³

- Kim Jones, a 60-year-old African-American substitute teacher in Wake Forest, North Carolina, did not have health insurance for 10 years before the Affordable Care Act. She says that she would get severe, disabling headaches, but did not go to the doctor because she did not have health insurance. In August 2013, prior to the subsidies taking effect, she fell and hit her head on the concrete. At the hospital, the doctors took an MRI to determine if she had a concussion, and found that Jones had a brain tumor. Even though the tumor was benign, because it pressed on her optic nerve, it could have blinded or potentially killed her if it wasn't removed. Because she was uninsured, however, Jones could not afford the surgery.³⁴
- Mi Kyong L. is a 56-year-old American deli store worker of Korean descent. Before the Affordable Care Act, she had been uninsured for 17 years. She explained, "My son and I have low income. . . . I didn't have job-based insurance and couldn't afford to get covered before the ACA came. Since I work on preparing [food] at deli store, I would have safety and health hazards including cuts/burns on my fingers. In addition to that, I was diagnosed with glaucoma but I couldn't regularly see an ophthalmologist because the doctor fee and prescription cost a lot for me.”³⁵

These examples confirm that Congress was correct to recognize that the absence of affordable health care constituted a serious problem to numerous low-income Americans. Congress enacted the Affordable Care Act as a critical step towards ending that problem.

II. BECAUSE OF THE FEDERAL SUBSIDIES, THE AFFORDABLE CARE ACT IS ACHIEVING CONGRESS'S PURPOSE.

The federal subsidies are critical to meeting Congress's purpose of providing all Americans with affordable health care. And, in large part because of the application of the subsidies provided by section 36B of the Internal Revenue Code, the Affordable Care Act has made great strides towards ensuring that all Americans have access to health care.

Under the Affordable Care Act, the country's uninsured rate for “nonelderly adults fell by an estimated 10.6 million between September 2013 and September 2014 as the uninsurance rate fell from 17.7 percent to 12.4 percent—a drop of 30.1 percent.”³⁶ This is the largest decrease in

50 years,³⁷ with the largest decrease seen in African Americans and lower-income adults.³⁸

In the initial open enrollment period, over 8 million people selected a plan through Exchanges that states established for themselves and federally-facilitated Exchanges.³⁹ And since open enrollment for 2015 began on November 15, 2014, there have been 7.1 million new enrollees or automatic re-enrollees in federally-facilitated Exchange states alone.⁴⁰ The Department of Health and Human Services estimates that there will be approximately 9 to 10 million enrollees in 2015.⁴¹ According to estimates by the Urban Institute, under the Affordable Care Act, 1.3 million Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders will obtain insurance coverage, a 48 percent reduction in the number of uninsured Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander community members.⁴²

Many previously uninsured people are now able to purchase health insurance because of subsidies. Of the people who signed up for plans through the federally-facilitated Exchanges during the first month of the 2015 Open Enrollment period, 87 percent receive federal subsidies.⁴³ Yet, these numbers do not reflect everyone who is eligible. An estimated 18 million Americans are eligible for subsidies to help pay for their health insurance.⁴⁴ These subsidies could benefit an estimated 25 percent of Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders.⁴⁵ Indeed, in California alone, 17 to 21 percent of total enrollments in California's Exchange were Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders.⁴⁶ This was double the state's projected base enrollment rate for Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders, with 88 percent of the enrollees receiving subsidies.⁴⁷

The experiences of numerous individuals, including members of Asian American, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander communities, demonstrate the direct and substantial impact of these subsidies and the necessity of allowing all Americans to access them.

For example, Mi Kyong L., the deli store worker discussed in Section I, supra, was able to get the health insurance she needed. She says:

[S]omeone recommended a local navigator agency, where a Korean speaking Navigator explained that I was eligible for ACA and could receive $252 of Advance Premium Tax Credit every month to pay a low premium. My son and I are happy that I have [a] Korean speaking primary doctor and I can have good health care thanks to the ACA. . . . Tax credits or subsidies are positively necessary for me.⁴⁸

Kim Jones, the African-American substitute teacher discussed in Section I, supra, enrolled in a plan through a federally-facilitated Exchange and receives a subsidy. Now Ms. Jones only pays $20 per month for coverage, which she can afford, and this coverage has allowed her to get the surgery to remove her brain tumor.⁴⁹

Sam Hyun H., a 51-year-old man of Korean descent who is a pastor at a small church, now is able to access health care with the help of subsidies. Mr. H. explains that he did not buy health insurance before the Affordable Care Act, and instead spent his money on living costs, rent, and car payments, and only going to the doctor when it “was absolutely necessary. Getting preventative health care or receiving regular check-ups [was] simply too expensive.” A month after receiving health insurance from the Affordable Care Act, he suffered a heart attack. He explains:

I coughed all night without having a clue that I was actually suffering from a heart attack. If I didn't have my health insurance, I would have not even thought of going in for a check-up at the hospital and would have just waited for the coughing to subside and stop. With my insurance card in hand, I visited the Hackensack Hospital ER the next day with the help of my family members. At the ER, it was promptly declared that I was suffering a heart attack. The doctor announced that I needed to have a by-pass surgery as soon as possible, [and] within 30 minutes, and I was quickly transferred to the operating room after signing some paperwork. So far, I [have] had two surgeries . . . and had 4 stents implanted. Following those events, I have been regularly going to the doctors for my follow-up appointments. With the help of the Affordable Care Act, I was not only able to receive these services, but also [was able] to get the necessary medications.⁵⁰

Xiao Jiang Z., a 57-year-old administrative assistant of Chinese descent, explains that she is able to access health care with the help of subsidies. She says:

I was diagnosed with stage II breast cancer in 2010 and completed the 9-month treatment in 2011. During the treatment, I had health insurance through my job. However, I was laid off in June, 2012. Since then, I didn't have and couldn't afford to purchase any [private] health insurance coverage. As a result, I was not able to continue my post-treatment follow up care with my medical team at the MD Anderson Cancer Center.

Because of the [Affordable Care Act] and my part time employment . . . , I receive tax credits of $433 which significantly reduce the premium for the health insurance plan that I selected. I also receive the cost-sharing reduction. As a result, my monthly premium for health insurance coverage is $19.60, which is affordable to me, given my limited income. . . . I really appreciated the [Affordable Care Act,] which enables me to access the needed follow-up care after my cancer treatment.⁵¹

Similarly, Hong L., an Asian American home health care worker in Texas, suffered from chronic illnesses, such as diabetes, hyperlipidemia, and chronic chest and joint pains. She enrolled for health insurance under the Affordable Care Act and received a subsidy of roughly $400 per month, leaving her final monthly premium costs at $160 per month. She says that without subsidies, she would not be able to afford health insurance on her own or access high-quality medical care or medical treatments.⁵²

Congress intended the Affordable Care Act to help all Americans afford health insurance and get the care they need. With subsidies applicable to all qualified Americans, regardless of their state of residence, the Affordable Care Act achieves this purpose.

III. THE AFFORDABLE CARE ACT WILL BE UNABLE TO ACHIEVE CONGRESS'S PURPOSE WITHOUT SUBSIDIES IN ALL STATES.

As noted above, the purpose of the Affordable Care Act is to increase the number of Americans covered by health insurance and to decrease the cost of health care. The availability of subsidies in all states is essential to ensuring that the Affordable Care Act achieves its purpose.

If these subsidies are no longer available to individuals living in states with federally-facilitated Exchanges, premiums will increase significantly, and millions of lower-income individuals will no longer be able to afford the health insurance they need. Indeed, some will have to forgo health care, often until it is too late, which would lead to higher costs.⁵³ When only the sick and those who need health care purchase health coverage, the end result is unstable health insurance marketplaces caused by adverse selection, premium increases and market contraction. See King v. Burwell, 759 F.3d 358 (4th Cir. 2014). As a result, the marketplace stability brought about by the Affordable Care Act would be undermined to such an extent that its entire structure could become unworkable. See Nat'l Fed'n of Indep. Bus., 132 S. Ct. at 2674 (Scalia, Kennedy, Thomas, & Alito, JJ., dissenting) (recognizing that with absence of federal subsidies, Exchanges would not operate as intended).

Indeed, if these subsidies were no longer available in the states with federally-facilitated Exchanges, more than 13 million Americans would lose access to the subsidies.⁵⁴ Currently, 87 percent of individuals in states with federally-facilitated Exchanges have selected plans with subsidies, paying an average monthly premium of $82.⁵⁵

Should their subsidies be revoked, the amount these individuals would pay for their insurance would increase by $264 to $346 per month.⁵⁶ This increase would be in addition to any premium increase that would result from significantly altering the policyholder pool in these states and nationally.

The precipitous increase in premium costs also would lead to a decline in the total number of individuals insured in the United States, from 245 to 234 million.⁵⁷ According to an Urban Institute projection, up to 8.2 million people in 34 states would lose their insurance due to increases in premium costs, “a 44 percent increase in the uninsured relative to the number uninsured under the law as currently implemented.”⁵⁸ Likewise, if subsidies were no longer offered, premiums would rise significantly throughout the country, including by 47 percent in states with federally-facilitated Exchanges.⁵⁹ A lack of subsidies would affect individuals throughout the country, including individuals who purchased plans in states that established Exchanges themselves.

Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders represent 8 percent (or slightly more than 300,000) of the individuals who selected a plan through a federally-facilitated Exchange during the open enrollment period.⁶⁰ The experiences of members of these communities from states with federally-facilitated Exchanges demonstrate the direct and substantial impact voiding these subsidies would have for people in those states.

- Dilli B. is a 32-year-old Bhutanese refugee who works at a Walmart in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Without the subsidies, his monthly payment would increase by a factor of more than 6.5, from $68 to $447 per month. descent who currently takes advantage of the subsidies and can go to see the doctors as needed and get medicine to treat his cancer. The impact of the loss of subsidies on his health and well-being would be extreme, because even the cheapest plan will be a huge problem for the family and they might even consider not getting health coverage.⁶²

- Sione, a diabetic Tongan male living in Utah, says that without health insurance through the Affordable Care Act, his life would be in danger because he wouldn't be able to control his glucose levels. He says that his only other option would be to go to the hospital emergency department, but he would not be able to pay bills from such a visit.⁶³
- Hyun H., a 50-year-old of Korean descent from Ridgewood, New Jersey, reports that if she does not have access to subsidies, “[m]y husband and I are more likely to go without a health plan, going back to uninsured and being distraught. . . . My husband will lose his confidence in managing his diabetes without doctor’s care so [it will be] hard [for him] to stay healthy.” She says they will have to choose between purchasing health insurance and other necessities.⁶⁴

⁶³ Statement on File With APIAHF.

The subsidies are an essential component of the Affordable Care Act that enable it to achieve its critical objectives of increasing access to health care to all uninsured individuals and reducing health care costs. A determination in favor of Petitioners would subvert these core purposes and defeat Congress's explicit intent. Indeed, denying needed federal subsidies to those who purchase policies on federally-facilitated Exchanges would so undermine the marketplaces that are the backbone of the Affordable Care Act that it would inflict devastating harm on those most in need, including low-income Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders and other racial and ethnic communities.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, amici support Respondents' request that the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

APPENDIX A

List of Entities Joining Amicus Curiae Brief

1. AAHC-HOPE Clinic*

Asian American Health Coalition (AAHC) of the Greater Houston Area is a non-profit organization dedicated to improving the health of all Asian Americans in Houston by increasing access to health care and through population-specific health promotion and health education projects. AAHC was founded in in 1994 and has actively promoted health access, knowledge and disease prevention activities and programs in the Greater Houston area. In 2002, in recognition of the significantly unmet medical needs of the residents of Southwest Houston, AAHC established the HOPE clinic to provide culturally and linguistically appropriate primary health care services to all, but especially to underserved Asians with limited English proficiency. AAHC-HOPE Clinic supports this brief because of the tremendous impact of subsidies in helping members of the Asian American community access care and improve their health with affordable health insurance.

2. API Equality-LA*

API Equality-LA is a grassroots coalition that works to advance the civil rights of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender communities through organizing, public education and advocacy. API Equality-LA's mission is to advocate for fair treatment of the LGBT community, including marriage equality and access to health care, focusing on the Asian and Pacific Islander communities of the greater Los Angeles area.

3. Apicha Community Health Center

Apicha Community Health Center (Apicha CHC), formally Asian & Pacific Islander Coalition on HIV/AIDS, provides affordable healthcare and wellness services for underserved and vulnerable people living in New York City. Apicha CHC strives to increase access to comprehensive primary care, preventive health, mental health, and supportive services. Apicha CHC advocates for and provides a welcoming environment for underserved and vulnerable people, especially Asians and Pacific Islanders, the LGBT Community, individuals living with and affected by HIV/AIDS, and other people of color. The Affordable Care Act provides important access and coverage to underserved and marginal communities and allows Apicha CHC to continue its important and lifesaving work. It is because of Apicha CHC's pursuit for a healthier quality of life that it participates in this amicus brief.

4. Arab Community Center for Economic and Social Services

Arab Community Center for Economic and Social Services (ACCESS) has been serving the community for more than 40 years. ACCESS was founded by a group of dedicated volunteers in 1971 out of a storefront in the impoverished South End of Dearborn, Michigan. ACCESS was created to assist the Arab immigrant population adapt to life in the United States. ACCESS is the largest Arab American human services nonprofit in the United States. With ten locations and more than 100 programs serving Metro Detroit, ACCESS offers a wide range of social, economic, health and educational services to a diverse population. ACCESS supports this brief because of the importance of the Affordable Care Act in helping Arab American communities access health insurance coverage and improve their overall health and well-being.

5. Asian & Pacific Islander National Cancer Survivors Network

Asian and Pacific Islander National Cancer Survivors Network (APINCSN) is a network of cancer survivors, their family members, health care providers, researchers, and community members, as well as organizations that are concerned about the issue of cancer and survivorship in Asian American, Native Hawaiian ,and Pacific Islander communities. APINCSN links Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders with critical resources, such as contact with other survivors, referrals to cancer support and survivorship services, and access to multi-lingual cancer materials, and also offers supportive and educational networking opportunities. APINCSN is supporting this brief because of the benefits under the Affordable Care Act for Asian Americans, Native Hawaiians, and Pacific Islanders and cancer.

6. Asian & Pacific Islander Wellness Center

Asian & Pacific Islander Wellness Center is a health services, education, research, and policy organization dedicated to transforming the lives of LGBT people and communities of color through health, wellness, and equality. Asian & Pacific Islander Wellness Center believes everyone needs access to high-quality, culturally competent health care. Based in San Francisco's Tenderloin neighborhood, one of the densest and most impoverished urban areas in the country, Asian & Pacific Islander Wellness Center operates a free community health clinic and offers HIV/AIDS treatment, care, and prevention services. It also provides statewide and national capacity building, training, and policy advocacy assistance. Asian & Pacific Islander Wellness Center supports this brief because it believes the Affordable Care Act improves health care access for LGBT people and communities of color, especially those living with HIV/AIDS.

7. Asian Health Coalition*

Asian Health Coalition (AHC) was founded as the "Asian Health Coalition of Illinois" in 1996. Its mission is to improve the health and well-being of Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders in Illinois through advocacy, technical assistance, education, and community-based research. AHC focuses on building strong and innovative health promotion programs in Asian communities throughout the metropolitan Chicago area. During the first open enrollment periods under the Affordable Care Act, AHC provided outreach, education, and enrollment assistance services to hundreds of individuals and families in the Chicago area. Many individuals could only afford to purchase plans through the federal Health Insurance Marketplace because of subsidies provided by the federal government. AHC supports this brief because we recognize the crucial role that the Affordable Care Act's subsidies play in helping communities access health insurance in order to improve their overall health and well-being.

8. Asian Human Services*

Asian Human Services (AHS) began helping South East Asian refugees in 1978. For over 36 years, the organization has retained a single purpose: to positively transform lives among Chicago's immigrants, refugees, and other underserved communities. Today, AHS continues to assist individuals and families in the same way, providing aid to populations from many different localities. Each year, AHS serves thousands of at-risk clients from many different countries through multiple programs in over 28 languages. In fiscal year 2014, AHS has served 30,000 people throughout Illinois, the majority of whom have incomes below the federal poverty level. AHS supports this brief because of the impact the subsidies have in helping Chicago's diverse community access care and maintain and improve their health.

9. Asian Law Alliance*
