SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT ..... 14

ARGUMENT..... 15

    A.    Our Businesses Benefit From Diversity and Inclusion..... 20

    B.    To Reap The Rewards Of Diversity,
          Employers Need To Be Able To Recruit And Retain Top Talent, In Part
          Through Equitable And Competitive
          Benefits Packages. .... 23

        1.    Employees in same-sex relationships receive varying, if any, access to the rights, benefits, and privileges that different-sex couples enjoy..... 27

        2.    Marriage discrimination drives talented individuals away from jurisdictions in which amici do business..... 30

    C.    Marriage Discrimination Injures Amici's Businesses. .... 35

        1.    The states' bans impose significant burdens on our employees and our businesses. .... 36

        2.    State bans undermine our corporate cultures..... 41

INTEREST OF THE AMICI CURIAE<sup>1</sup>

This brief is submitted with the written consent of all parties pursuant to Rule 37.3(a).

Amici include technology, materials, airline, financial services, healthcare, medical technology, consumer products, apparel, and entertainment companies, hoteliers, restaurateurs, service providers, and retailers, ranging from small businesses to Fortune 100 companies. Amici share a profound desire to attract and retain a talented workforce.

Some of the states in which amici do business make marriage equally available to all of our employees and colleagues; others prohibit marriages between couples of the same sex and refuse to recognize existing same-sex marriages. This dual regime burdens amici. It creates legal uncertainty and imposes unnecessary costs and administrative complexities on employers, and requires differential employer treatment of employees who are similarly situated save for the state where they reside.

State laws that prohibit or decline to recognize marriages between same-sex couples hamper employer efforts to recruit and retain the most

<sup>1</sup> Pursuant to Rule 37.6, counsel for amici certify that no counsel for any party had any role in authoring this brief in whole or in part, and that no person other than amici, their members, or their counsel made any monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. The parties have consented to the filing of this brief, and their letters of consent have been filed with the Clerk.

talented workforce possible in those states. Our successes depend upon the welfare and morale of all employees, without distinction. The burden imposed by inconsistent and discriminatory state laws of having to administer complicated schemes to account for differential treatment of similarly situated employees breeds unnecessary confusion, tension, and diminished employee morale.

Amici submit this brief to advise the Court of the adverse impact on employers of these conflicting legal schemes.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

More than seventy percent of Americans live in a state that celebrates and recognizes same-sex marriages. But many states continue to prohibit same-sex couples from marrying, and decline to recognize the valid, existing marriages of citizens married to a spouse of the same sex. This fractured legal landscape harms employers and employees alike.

Over the past several years, federal and state courts have evaluated the constitutionality of same-sex marriage bans to varying effect. Amici already operate against a complicated, uncertain, and frequently changing backdrop of laws and employment-related regulations that increase our administrative costs. Inconsistent state marriage laws impose an added economic burden on American businesses at an estimated cost of over one billion dollars per year.

Discriminatory state laws force amici to implement inconsistent policies across the various jurisdictions in which we operate, our stated corporate principles of diversity and inclusion notwithstanding. Our ability to grow and maintain our businesses by attracting and retaining the best employee talent is hindered. The patchwork of state laws applicable to same-sex marriage thus impairs our business interests and employer/employee relations. If the Court were to affirm the decision below, the costs and uncertainty imposed by inconsistent state marriage laws will only continue. In contrast, reversal will reduce current costs, administrative burden, and diversion of resources from our core businesses.

We therefore respectfully urge the Court to reverse the decision below and affirm a uniform principle that all couples share in the right to marry.

ARGUMENT

Nearly two years ago, the Court held in United States v. Windsor that the federal government may not, consistent with the Constitution, refuse to recognize valid marriages between persons of the same sex.<sup>2</sup> The Court noted that some jurisdictions had determined that same-sex couples should have “the right to marry and so live with pride in themselves and their union and in a status of equality with all other married persons.”<sup>3</sup> The Court concluded that no legitimate purpose overcomes the purpose and effect to disparage and to injure those whom the State, by its marriage laws, sought to protect in personhood and dignity. By seeking to displace this protection and treating those persons as living in marriages less respected than others, the federal statute is in violation of the Fifth Amendment.<sup>4</sup>

Marriage is now equally available to all couples, regardless of each partner's sex, in thirty-seven states and the District of Columbia.<sup>5</sup> In sixteen of those states and the District of Columbia, state law provides same-sex couples with equal access to marriage—state laws that stand independent of whatever constitutional judgment the Court issues in this case.<sup>6</sup> In the other twenty-one states, same-sex cou-

In addition, the U.S. District Court for the District of Nebraska has issued an order that, effective March 9, 2015, "all relevant state officials are ordered to treat same-sex couples the same as different sex couples in the context of processing a marriage license or determining the rights, protections, obligations or benefits of marriage." *Waters v. <sup>8</sup> At this time, Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota, Tennessee, and Texas decline to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples. Among them, only Missouri recognizes marriages between persons of the same sex that were lawfully performed in other jurisdictions, States, FREEDOM TO MARRY, www.freedomtomarry.org/states/. A federal court has ordered that Nebraska license and recognize same-sex marriages starting March 9, 2015. See supra n.5.

As employers, amici know firsthand that this fractured legal landscape hampers economic growth and impedes innovation by forcing businesses to work harder, and invest more, to achieve the same return on our investments. Inconsistent marriage laws force companies to divert significant time and money to the creation and maintenance of complex administrative systems needed to differentiate treatment of otherwise indistinguishable employees based on the different marriage laws of the places where they live. These differences can create rifts in the employer-employee relationship.<sup>9</sup> Employers are better served by a uniform marriage rule that gives equal dignity to employee relationships. Allowing same-sex couples to marry improves employee morale and productivity, reduces uncertainty, and removes the wasteful administrative burdens imposed by the current disparity of state law treatment.

Although the Court did not decide in Windsor whether the Constitution requires that same-sex couples be allowed to marry, numerous courts have taken up that issue since. Four out of five United States Courts of Appeal have held that marriage must be equally available to same-sex couples.<sup>10</sup>

In one such ruling, the Ninth Circuit observed:

The lessons of our constitutional history are clear: inclusion strengthens, rather than weakens, our most important institutions. When we integrated our schools, education improved. When we opened our juries to women, our democracy became more vital. When we allowed lesbian and gay soldiers to serve openly in uniform, it enhanced unit cohesion. When same-sex couples are married, just as when opposite-sex couples are married, they serve as models of loving commitment to all.<sup>11</sup>

These same observations ring true for American companies: diversity and inclusion strengthen, not weaken, our businesses.

A. Our Businesses Benefit From Diversity and Inclusion.

“Today, diversity and inclusion ... are a given.”<sup>12</sup> They are among the core principles of amici in the conduct of their businesses. The value of diversity and inclusion in the workplace has been well-documented following rigorous analyses. Amici and others recognize that diversity is crucial to innovation and marketplace success.<sup>13</sup> Members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (“LGBT”) community are one source of that diversity. A May 2013 Small Business Majority survey reported that sixty-nine percent of small business owners support non-discrimination laws protecting LGBT workers.<sup>14</sup> As of 2015, eighty-nine percent of Fortune 500 companies provide non-discrimination protection for their LGBT employees, and sixty-six percent offer benefits to same-sex partners.<sup>15</sup>

Amici invest time and resources to achieve and maintain diversity and inclusion. It is the right thing to do and it yields tangible results. A diverse, inclusive workplace environment “increases the total human energy available to the organization. People can bring far more of themselves to their jobs because they are required to suppress far less.”<sup>16</sup> Inclusive companies are more open to new ideas and opportunities, while less prone to overconfidence when approaching challenges.<sup>17</sup> Companies that are diverse and inclusive obtain better profits and other outputs, thanks to improved team collaboration and commitment.<sup>18</sup> By contrast, “corporate cultures that don’t encourage openness and inclusiveness leave employees feeling isolated and fearful,” and lose marketing potential in reaching out to LGBT consumers.<sup>19</sup>

Empirical evidence shows the business value of investments in diversity. The Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law recently reviewed thirty-six research studies and found that working in an LGBT-supportive workplace results in “greater job commitment, improved workplace relationships, increased job satisfaction, improved health outcomes, and increased productivity” among LGBT employees.<sup>20</sup> A 2013 study of approximately 300 firms that adopted same-sex domestic partnership benefits between 1990 and 2006 showed an approximate ten percent average stock price increase over the sample period—a performance better than ninety-five percent of all U.S. professional mutual funds—as well as “significant improvement in operating performance relative to companies that did not adopt such policies.”<sup>21</sup>

Diverse workforces also help capture new clients.<sup>22</sup> A 2011 study found that sixty-eight local governments require that their contractors have LGBT-supportive hiring and benefits policies.<sup>23</sup>

Our corporate principles of diversity and inclusion are the right thing to do. Beyond that, however, such policies contribute to employee happiness and loyalty, greater company productivity and, ultimately, significant returns for our shareholders and owners.

B. To Reap The Rewards Of Diversity, Employers Need To Be Able To Recruit And Retain Top Talent, In Part Through Equitable And Competitive Benefits Packages.

In order to develop and grow a diverse organization, employers need to be able to recruit and retain the best talent.<sup>24</sup> Amici hire and promote employees based on ability. In the long run, discrimination impairs an employer's ability to compete for the best workforce. The market for top talent crosses state and even national boundaries. Benefits are critical to efforts to compete for top talent, as benefits directly contribute to successful recruiting and employee loy-leagues with same-sex partners or registered domestic partnerships for separate and unequal treatment, as compared to employees with different-sex partners. These state mandates upset our business philosophy and prevent employers like amici from reaching their full economic potential by discouraging highly-qualified employees from living and working in all of the jurisdictions where we do, or want to do, business.

1. Employees in same-sex relationships receive varying, if any, access to the rights, benefits, and privileges that different-sex couples enjoy.

Marriage equality is a reality in most of the United States right now. After Windsor, the federal government now recognizes all couples “whom the State, by its marriage laws, sought to protect in personhood and dignity” as married.<sup>34</sup> In the absence of a controlling statute to the contrary, the federal government respects same-sex couples as lawfully married if their marriages were performed in a state that legally authorizes such marriages.<sup>35</sup>

<sup>35</sup> Spousal eligibility for veteran’s benefits and Social Security benefits turns on marital status under the laws of a couple’s state of residence rather than the laws of the state in which their marriage was celebrated. See 38 U.S.C. § 103(c); 42 U.S.C. § 416(h)(1)(A)(i). Same-sex couples whose lawful marriages are not recognized by the state in which they live are thus ineligible for such benefits. These provisions are currently the subject of litigation. See Murphy v. Colvin, No. 1:14-cv-01764 (D.D.C. Oct. 22, 2014) (stayed) (challenging social security eligibility provi-

While “marriage is more than a routine classification for purposes of certain statutory benefits,”<sup>36</sup> as a legal status, marriage touches numerous aspects of life, both practical and profound.<sup>37</sup> Federal and state law provide the working family many benefits and protections relating to health care, dependent care, protected leave, and retirement. These laws provide security and support to an employee grappling with sickness, disability, childcare, family crises, or retirement—allowing the employee to devote more focus and attention to his or her work.

Those states that still prohibit same-sex marriage deny gay and lesbian employees in committed relationships equal access to government-afforded rights and benefits. This can result in same-sex couples being denied spousal rights most Americans take for granted, including adoption and parental rights, as well as the right to make medical decisions for an incapacitated spouse, access to health insurance and retirement benefits, property protections, and inher-

In addition to basic state benefits appurtenant to marriage, state bans on same-sex marriage also prevent same-sex couples from receiving myriad federal benefits, such as those relating to health insurance, military benefits, taxes, and immigration law.<sup>40</sup> The U.S. Department of Justice, for example, has announced that same-sex married couples will receive equal federal death benefits and educational payments for federal public safety officers, equal victim compensation payments, equal treatment in bankruptcy cases, equal rights for inmates in federal prison, and equal access to the marital privilege in federal court.<sup>41</sup>

Same-sex couples living in a non-recognition state must wed elsewhere in order to access federal benefits.<sup>42</sup> Even then, those same couples—and legally married same-sex couples who later move to one of those states (other than Missouri<sup>43</sup>)—will still be denied access to the wide range of state benefits, mutual responsibilities, and parental rights available to married partners of different sexes. That bar not only works to the detriment of employees, but also to employers that seek to recruit and retain the best human capital.

2. Marriage discrimination drives talented individuals away from jurisdictions in which amici do business.

LGBT-friendly policies offer tangible advantages in employee recruitment and retention.<sup>44</sup> Given the powerful evidence above, amici can only conclude that they are distinctly disadvantaged when looking to hire qualified, talented personnel in the states that do not allow same-sex couples to marry, or in asking current personnel to relocate to such states.<sup>45</sup> Job that restrictions on same-sex marriage made it more difficult to attract and retain employees in same-sex relationships who have spouses without United States permanent residency.<sup>51</sup> Similarly, a 2013 survey by the American Council on International Personnel reported that forty-two percent of responding member organizations lost potential hires because same-sex partners were at that time excluded from immigration benefits; respondents also reported that they could not complete internal transfers, even at the executive level, for the same reason.<sup>52</sup> The same logic holds true for employee transfers and migration across states. Employees with same-sex spouses face similar costs and lost productivity when facing the prospect being hired or transferring into non-recognition states. As more states provide access to marriage on equal terms, lesbian and gay employees are less willing to live and work in states that do not, to the detriment of their employers or would-be employers.

Such consequences have been observed across the country. For example, the former Rector of The College of William and Mary's Board of Visitors lamented the talent-retention problems caused by Virginia's (since-overturned) marriage ban:

We already have lost valued gay and lesbian faculty to our competitors who do not discriminate. With changes in federal benefits soon available to legally married gay couples, we will lose more. Two able individuals told me [recently] that they are leaving for another state—one a top professor [in a science-technology field] and another a university administrator just recruited to Virginia a few years ago.<sup>53</sup>

Indeed, Virginia’s governor lauded the initial federal district court decision overturning his state’s ban on same-sex marriage, noting the Commonwealth needed to ensure equality “to grow [Virginia’s] economy and attract the best businesses, entrepreneurs, and families.”<sup>54</sup> But the problem persists in states like Michigan, where immediately after the State eliminated domestic partnership benefits for public employees, college professors “started applying for jobs at universities with comprehensive domestic partnership benefits.”<sup>55</sup>

This evidence suggests that gay and lesbian employees may decide to leave a state hostile to same-sex marriage for ones in which they can receive full federal and state benefits—whether they are single and wishing to marry, married out-of-state and desiring equal access to state and federal benefits, or simply motivated by the need for certainty in their own life planning. Likewise, facing a possible transfer into one of these states, talented individuals may choose to part ways with their employers rather than risk the detrimental effects of non-recognition on themselves and their families. Other gay and lesbian workers may seek certainty and forego employment opportunities in these states altogether.

C. Marriage Discrimination Injures Amici's Businesses.

By not permitting same-sex couples to marry, states impose significant administrative burdens on businesses. Although amici can, and often do, voluntarily attempt to lessen the financial inequality placed on employees, those workarounds impose additional and unnecessary business expense, while still not fully ameliorating the differential treatment of employees. And the combined burden of administrative costs and tax consequences is significant; the 2015 estimated cost of marriage inequality to the private sector is $1.3 billion.<sup>56</sup>

1. The states' bans impose significant burdens on our employees and our businesses.

For employers, the patchwork of inconsistent state law creates significant burdens in the administration of benefits for employees whose marriages are not recognized by the state. For example, “[i]n [non-recognition states], employers are still expected to impute income spent on benefits provided to a same-sex spouse for state tax purposes, but not to do so for federal tax purposes....”<sup>57</sup> The situation is complicated further when mobile employees live, work, file taxes, and receive benefits in multiple jurisdictions.

Georgia’s tax code is a good example. Although the federal tax code now recognizes valid marriages between same-sex couples, Georgia’s Constitution states that “[n]o union between persons of the same sex shall be recognized by this state as entitled to the benefits of marriage.”<sup>58</sup> According to Georgia’s Department of Revenue, that means that same-sex married couples must file state tax returns separately, as single status filers or, if qualified, as head-of-household status filers.<sup>59</sup> In light of this and similar laws, employers must (i) identify from among their married employees those married to a spouse of the same sex; (ii) treat an employee with a same-sex spouse as unmarried for state tax purposes; (iii) treat the same employee as married for federal tax purposes; and (iv) monitor every such employee's state of residence and alter the treatment of their tax liability whenever the employee moves from a non-recognition state to a recognition state or vice versa. These multiple, continual, and mandatory obligations result in significant burdens and expenses.

Discriminatory state laws add another dimension of problems for businesses. Human resources departments are often the first stop for employees confused about conflicting legal rules. That means benefits administrators may be asked to give advice and make recommendations about complex legal issues. Even the well informed human resources professional faces the challenge of addressing inconsistent state laws. And a mistaken answer may lead to harsh tax and financial consequences for the employee, and further erosion of workplace morale.

These concerns are more pronounced today than ever before given the mobile nature of the modern workforce. Employees often work in several states, where they must then file taxes and determine their eligibility for various state benefits.<sup>60</sup> This creates significant administrative burdens on employers who must keep up with the rapidly changing legal landscape, and then create and maintain complicated equitable policies and benefits.

Companies operating nationwide, many of whom have centralized HR functions, find themselves in a complicated labyrinth of differing rules, regulations, and internal policies. These variations must often be incorporated manually into otherwise automated processes, a requirement that is both burdensome and prone to human error. The burden on small employers may be particularly onerous, as they may find it difficult to devote limited resources to navigating conflicting and changing laws, let alone to establishing workarounds. Benefits administration for an employee with a same-sex partner is more likely to occur in an ad hoc, piecemeal fashion, increasing the potential for error and disparate treatment. Establishing marriage equality nationwide would result in benefits and tax treatment that can be more efficiently and equitably administered.

In an attempt to alleviate the disparities and frustrations of discriminatory benefit systems and other benefits-related matters, some employers have determined that it is in their business interests to incur the cost and administrative burden of “workarounds.” These employer-created benefits structures attempt to compensate for the lack of recognized relationship status for employees who cannot marry under state law, and to provide benefits for those whose marriages are recognized at the federal, but not the state, level.

To take one common example, workers in a non-recognition state with a same-sex spouse or partner are typically taxed on the value of health-care benefits for their spouses/partners, whereas employees with different-sex spouses are not so taxed. Many employers will attempt to address such taxability differences by increasing (or “grossing up”) pay for workers with same-sex spouses/partners.<sup>61</sup> While grossing up and other workarounds offer many employers a way to reduce the competitive disadvantage of doing business in states that ban same-sex marriage, they also increase costs on the employer beyond the direct cost of benefits.<sup>62</sup>

The U.S. Office of Personnel Management noted that the grossing-up approach “raises costs considerably .... Under a grossing up policy, a $1,000 net cash

Grossing up is a complicated process for employers, requiring careful consideration of such things as appropriate tax rates, coverage for dependents or a partner’s children, and the impact of marital status.<sup>65</sup> After the Windsor decision, state-level tax decisions regarding individuals with same-sex spouses now “affect not only gross-up calculations for these employees, but also the taxability for state purposes of benefits made available to spouses of employees married to a person of the same sex.”<sup>66</sup> In addition, workarounds can raise concerns about complexity in providing and administering domestic partner benefits, and potential legal liabilities.<sup>67</sup>

In short, workarounds themselves cause administrative burden, sometimes requiring employers with grossing up policies to retain experts to craft policies and structure systems that will account for gross-up amounts, as well as to educate human resources, benefits, and payroll administrators. And these workarounds may also attract attention from regulators or cause tension with certain employees, shareholders, or investors due to the administrative burdens and increased costs.

Amici and other employers incur a real cost to account for and respond to unequal access to marriage across the United States, a cost to the American private sector estimated at $3.5 million per day.<sup>68</sup> Granting same-sex couples equal access to marriage would remove significant financial and regulatory burdens currently imposed on American employers.

2. State bans undermine our corporate cultures.

The denial of marriage rights to same-sex couples in non-recognition states goes against our core values and principles. As employers, we recognize the value of diversity, and we want the jurisdictions where we operate to recognize the need to enable all married persons to “live with pride in themselves and their union[s],”<sup>69</sup> and to honor the “personal dignity and autonomy” of all of our employees.<sup>70</sup>

We develop and implement non-discrimination policies not only because they are the right thing to do, but also because these policies are crucial to our ability to recruit and retain excellent employees. The ability to hire the best human capital helps amici create teams and corporate cultures that allow us to create and innovate, and ultimately increase our profits and economic value. Marriage bans conscript employers, as the administrators of benefits, to implement laws that treat employees in committed same-sex relationships differently from employees married to different-sex spouses. The need to accommodate state laws hostile to same-sex marriage prevents employers from treating similarly situated employees identically, our stated policies notwithstanding.

Our employees are our most valuable assets—and yet the law treats many of them as second-class citizens. The reality is that even “small differences in how people are treated ... convey strong messages about the[ir] perceived relative value.”<sup>71</sup>

An organization's policies toward its employees, whether an inclusive healthcare policy or a discriminatory promotion and hiring policy, send latent signals to the entire organization regarding permissible biological and behavioral attributes. Such signals may then impact all employees, affecting their comfort, their unconscious projections of identity and gender in critical interpersonal meetings.<sup>72</sup>

The end result is employee uncertainty, low morale, decreased productivity, and increased costs.

Diversity provides many benefits, but must be well-managed within each organization.<sup>73</sup> In 2011, an interview study presented substantial anecdotal evidence that perceptions of inequality in a workforce can lead to high turnover, loss of talented employees, litigation, and bad publicity.<sup>74</sup> Even if we take on the burden of developing workarounds to ameliorate disparate state treatment, we are still placed in the role of intrusive inquisitor, imputer of taxable income, and administrator of legally-mandated separate and unequal systems. For employees who report themselves as married, we must determine the sex of their spouse and judge whether that marriage is recognized for state law purposes where the employee lives and works. That the law requires us to even ask such questions emphasizes that those employees are in the “unstable position of being in a second-tier marriage.”<sup>75</sup> Such judgments may unintentionally reinforce the State’s message that these employees and their relationships are not “worthy of dignity in the community equal with all other marriages.”<sup>76</sup>

As a result, we are hampered in our ability to make our businesses as diverse and inclusive as possible, despite our stated policies and our recognized business case. We become, in short, party to our employees’ injury—and our own.

CONCLUSION

Employees with partners of the same sex should be permitted to marry if they so choose, and then should be treated identically to their married heterosexual counterparts. State laws that require otherwise impose a significant burden on us and harm our ability to attract and retain the best employees. Such laws force businesses to uphold discriminatory laws that run counter to important corporate values. In the end, economic growth suffers.
