

No. 12-696

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

TOWN OF GREECE,
Petitioner,

v.

SUSAN GALLOWAY AND LINDA STEVENS,
Respondents,

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF OF THE
AMERICAN CIVIL RIGHTS UNION
IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

PETER J. FERRARA
Counsel of Record
20594 Woodmere Court
Sterling, VA 20165
(703) 582-8466
peterferrara@msn.com
Counsel for Amicus Curiae
American Civil Rights Union

August 2, 2013

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....	ii
INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE	1
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	2
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	4
ARGUMENT.....	6
I. ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE CASES SHOULD BE GOVERNED BY THE COERCION TEST, WHICH IS FAITHFUL TO THE TEXT AND HISTORY OF THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE ITSELF	6
A. The Text and Associated History of the Establishment Clause Show That Coercion Is a Necessary Element of An Establishment Clause Violation ...	8
B. The Coercion Standard Is Practical and Workable.....	18
II. THE VOLUNTARY, ROTATING, INVOCATIONS OFFERED BY CITIZENS OF THE TOWN OF GREECE TO SOLEMNIZE OPENINGS OF TOWN BOARD MEETINGS ARE NOT AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION BECAUSE THEY DO NOT INVOLVE COERCION.....	20
CONCLUSION	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES	Page
Abington School District v. Schempp , 374 U.S. 203 (1963).....	8
Aguilar v. Felton , 473 U.S. 402 (1985).....	7
County of Alleghany v. American Civil Liberties Union , 492 U.S. 573 (1989).....	7
Committee for Public Educ. v. Regan , 444 U.S. 646 (1980).....	7
District of Columbia v. Heller , 554 U.S. 570 (2008).....	5, 6
Edwards v. Aguillard , 482 U.S. 578 (1987).....	7
Engel v. Vitale , 370 U.S. 421 (1962).....	17
Lemon v. Kurtzman , 403 U.S. 602 (1971).....	3, 4, 7, 8
Lynch v. Donnelly , 465 U.S. 668 (1984).....	16
Marsh v. Chambers , 463 U.S. 783 (1983).....	3, 16
McGowan v. Maryland , 366 U.S. 420 (1961).....	15
Parker v. District of Columbia , 478 F.3d 370 (D.C. Cir. 2007).....	5, 6
Roemer v. Board of Public Works , 426 U.S. 736 (1976).....	7
Wallace v. Jaffree , 472 U.S. 38 (1985).....	7

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

OTHER AUTHORITIES	Page
Brady, Confusion Twice Confounded: The First Amendment and the Supreme Court (1954).....	10
Choper, The Religion Clauses of the First Amendment: Reconciling the Conflict , 41 U. Pit. L. Rev. 673, 681 (1980)	8
Jefferson, Notes , in 5 The Founder's Constitution , p. 14 at 79-80 (P. Kurland and R. Lerner, eds. 1987).....	14
Kurland, The Irrelevance of the Constitution: The Religion Clauses of the First Amendment and the Supreme Court , 24 Vill. L. Rev. 3, 20 (1978).....	8
Levy, The Establishment Clause: Religion and the First Amendment (1987).....	10
Locke, A Letter Concerning Toleration (1684), in 5 The Founder's Constitution , p. 14 at 52 (P. Kurland and R. Lerner, eds. 1987)	11
Paulsen, Religion, Equality, and the Constitution: An Equal Protection Approach to Establishment Clause Adjudication , 61 Notre Dame L. Rev. 311 (1986).....	8
Pfeffer, Church, State and Freedom (rev. 1st ed. 1967)	9
St. George Tucker, Blackstone's Commentaries (1803) in 5 The Founders Constitution , p. 14 at 96-97 (P. Kurland and R. Lerner, eds. 1987).....	12, 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
1 Stokes, Church and State in the United States (1st ed. 1950).....	17
Washington, First Inaugural Address, April 30, 1789, in Inaugural Addresses of the Presidents of the United States from George Washington, 1789 to George Bush, 1989 at 1, 2 (Bicentennial ed. 1989).....	15
Virginia Act for Establishing Religious Freedom , in 5 The Founders Constitution , p. 14 at 85 (P. Kurland and R. Lerner, eds. 1987)	14, 15
Virginia Declaration of Rights , Section 16 (June 12, 1776), Va. Const. art. I, Sect. 16, in 5 The Founders Constitution , p. 14, at 70 (P. Kurland and R. Lerner, eds. 1987).....	13
6 W. & A. Durant, The Story of Civilization (1957).....	9

INTEREST OF THE *AMICUS CURIAE*¹

The American Civil Rights Union is a non-partisan, non-profit, 501(c)(3), legal/educational policy organization dedicated to defending all of our constitutional rights, not just those that might be politically correct or fit a particular ideology. It was founded in 1998 by long time policy advisor to President Reagan, and the architect of modern welfare reform, Robert B. Carleson. Carleson served as President Reagan's chief domestic policy advisor on federalism, and originated the concept of ending the federal entitlement to welfare by giving the responsibility for those programs to the states through finite block grants. Since its founding, the ACRU has filed amicus curiae briefs on constitutional law issues in cases nationwide.

Those setting the organization's policy as members of the Policy Board are former U.S. Attorney General, Edwin Meese III; former Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, William Bradford Reynolds; former Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Counsel, Charles J. Cooper; John M. Olin Distinguished Professor of Economics at George Mason University, Walter E. Williams; former Ambassador Curtin Winsor, Jr.; former Assistant Attorney General for Justice Programs, Richard Bender Abell and former Ohio Secretary of State J. Kenneth Blackwell.

¹ Peter J. Ferrara authored this brief for the American Civil Rights Union (ACRU). No counsel for either party authored the brief in whole or in part and no one apart from the ACRU made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief. All parties were timely notified and have consented to the filing of this brief.

This case is of interest to the ACRU because we are concerned to ensure maximum freedom of religion for all, regardless of political correctness.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Town of Greece allows citizen volunteers from any faith tradition or no faith tradition to open town board meetings with an invocation to solemnize the proceedings. Pet. App. 29a. Those who have most recently given prayers at meetings include representatives from a Mormon church, the Vietnamese Buddhist Association, two Jehovah's Witness congregations, the Bahá'í faith, a "Wiccan High Priest," a number of Catholic churches, and several Protestant churches from a wide range of denominations, a Jewish layman, and an individual whose church is listed as "Cherokee Indian," C.A. App. A1053-55.

The Town has never rejected a request from any citizen to deliver an invocation, with atheists and non-believers welcome to do so as well. Pet. App. 20a. The Town has never established any guidelines concerning the content of any of the prayers, nor has ever asked to review the wording of any prayer prior to its delivery. Pet. App. 29a-30a.

When Respondents complained to Town officials starting in September 2007 that the prayers "aligned the town with Christianity" and "were sectarian rather than Secular," Town officials explained in response that anyone could volunteer to deliver the opening prayer and that the Town would not police the content of the prayers offered. Pet. App. 8a.

Respondents filed suit against the Town in February 2008, alleging that the Town's procedure for selecting prayer-givers unconstitutionally "prefer[red] Christianity over other faiths," and that the Town unconstitutionally permitted individual citizens to deliver "sectarian" prayers. Pet. App. 57a-58a.

The District Court found no evidence that the Town ever "intentionally excluded [members of] non-Christian faiths from offering prayers." Pet. App. 74a. The court also found "no indication that the Town established its unwritten policy of having prayer before meetings for an improper purpose." Pet. App. 121a.

The court further observed that "[a]ny analysis of the constitutionality of legislative prayer necessarily begins with" this Court's decision in Marsh v. Chambers. Pet. App. 79a. The court recognized that this Court affirmed legislative-prayer practices in Marsh based on the unbroken history of legislative prayer in the United States. Pet. App. 79a-82a. The court concluded that legislative prayer was an "exception to the Lemon test, based primarily if not exclusively on the long history of legislative prayer in Congress, which is often overtly sectarian." Pet. App. 127a.

The District Court consequently ruled that the Town's board meeting prayer practices did not violate the Establishment Clause, granting summary judgment in favor of the Town. Pet. App. 78a.

On appeal, the court below reversed the grant of summary judgment because, in its view, “the town’s prayer practice had the effect, even if not the purpose, of establishing religion.” Pet. App. 10a. The court found that most of the prayers “contained uniquely Christian references,” and at times were often phrased in the “first person plural,” such as “let ‘us’ pray.” Pet. App. 20a, 23a. The court concluded that the “impression, created by the steady drumbeat of often specifically sectarian Christian prayers, that the town’s prayer practice associated the town with the Christian religion” violated the Establishment Clause, even though “individuals from other faiths [sometimes] delivered the invocation.” Pet. App. 22a.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The endorsement test really only involves subjective, conclusory labeling rather than an analytical tool that helps to resolve the legal issues in Establishment Clause cases. And frankly that is true of the three-pronged test in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971) as well. Several members of this Court have expressed similar complaints about these old standards over the years.

The text of the Constitution itself, and the historical context informing the meaning of the words used, are the primary governing sources for interpreting the rights of the American people recognized in our founding document. We submit that this Court should follow the example of its recent decision in District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008), and in the opinion of the lower court affirmed in Parker v. District of Columbia, 478 F.3d 370 (D.C. Cir. 2007), and return to the fundamentals in regard to the text and history of the Establishment Clause as well.

At the time the First Amendment was adopted, the countries of Europe each maintained their own preferred “Establishment of Religion”, which meant an official government religion enforced by laws requiring attendance at the official church, regular contributions to it, and other preferences in law for members of that church. These establishment policies all involved government coercion to force citizens to support the one favored church. Almost all of the American colonies had such establishments as well, with legal compulsion or coercion as their hallmark.

These practices, and anything like them involving coercion in regard to religion, are what the framers meant to prohibit in adopting the Establishment Clause, for this is what an Establishment of Religion meant at the time. They did not mean, however, to prohibit any voluntary, public, religious speech, or religious expression or symbolism, which do not involve any such coercion.

On this basis, we urge this Court to adopt a new standard evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations based on whether the challenged policy, practice, or action involves coercion in regard to religion. With such a clear, simple standard rooted in the text of the Constitution and its surrounding history, this case is easily resolved.

The voluntary, rotating, legislative prayers offered by citizens of the Town of Greece to open Town Board meetings do not involve an unconstitutional establishment of religion because they do not involve coercion of any sort. They merely involve voluntary speech, which is not coercive in any way. Those hearing the prayers remain entirely free to accept or reject what they hear, in whole or in part, as they each choose. No one is forced or coerced to accept or reject or believe or do anything. The Town of Greece legislative prayers do not involve anything like the coercive historic practices of religious establishments known by the Founders, which is what they were prohibiting with the term “Establishment of Religion.”

ARGUMENT

I. ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE CASES SHOULD BE GOVERNED BY THE COERCION TEST, WHICH IS FAITHFUL TO THE TEXT AND HISTORY OF THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE ITSELF.

The text of the Constitution itself, and the historical context informing the meaning of the words used, are the primary governing sources for interpreting the rights of the American people recognized in our founding document. A recent example of such fundamental Constitutional analysis is provided in District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008), and in the opinion of the lower court affirmed in Parker v. District of Columbia, 478 F.3d 370 (D.C. Cir. 2007).

We submit that this Court should return to the fundamentals in regard to the text and history of the Establishment Clause as well. The endorsement test really only involves subjective labeling rather than an analytical tool that helps to resolve the legal issues. And frankly that is true of the three-pronged test in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602 (1971) as well. What the principal and primary purpose and effect of a challenged policy or action is, or what entanglement is “excessive”, or what involves an “endorsement” of religion rather than an accommodation, really just involves slapping a conclusory label on a decision reached on other considerations. Several members of this Court have expressed similar complaints about these old standards over the years.²

² Wallace v Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 110-11 (1985)(Rehnquist, J., dissenting)(providing examples of the difficulty the Court has had in “making the Lemon test yield principled results,” adding that the Lemon test is “a constitutional theory [that] has no basis in the history of the amendment it seeks to interpret, is difficult to apply and yields unprincipled results.”); Committee for Public Educ. v. Regan, 444 U.S. 646, 662 (1980)(Under Lemon the Court has “sacrifice[d] clarity and predictability for flexibility”); County of Alleghany v. American Civil Liberties Union, 492 U.S. 573,656 (1989) (Kennedy, J. concurring in the judgment and dissenting in part)(“Substantial revision of our Establishment Clause doctrine may be in order”); Aguilar v. Felton, 473 U.S. 402, 429 (1985)(Justice O’Connor dissenting)(expressing “doubts about the entanglement test”); Roemer v. Board of Public Works, 426 U.S. 736, 738 (1976)(White, J., concurring in the judgement)(“I am no more reconciled now to Lemon I than I was when it was decided....The threefold test of Lemon I imposes unnecessary, and...superfluous tests for establishing [an Establishment Clause violation]; Edwards v. Aguillard, 482 U.S. 578, 636 (1987)(Scalia, J. dissenting)(“pessimistic evaluation...of the totality of Lemon is particularly applicable to the ‘purpose’

What is needed are clear, distinguishing, legal principles by which alleged Establishment Clause violations can be measured. We submit that the text and history of the Establishment Clause provides precisely such principles. As Justice Brennan said in Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 294 (1963)(concurring), “The line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers.” The Coercion Test involves precisely that line and that test arising out of the text and history of the Establishment Clause itself.

A. The Text and Associated History of the Establishment Clause Show That Coercion Is a Necessary Element of An Establishment Clause Violation.

The text of the First Amendment states, “Congress shall make no law...respecting an Establishment of Religion....” That phrase “Establishment of Religion” had a particular meaning at the time of the Constitution.

prong.”); See also Paulsen, Religion, Equality, and the Constitution: An Equal Protection Approach to Establishment Clause Adjudication, 61 Notre Dame L. Rev. 311, 316-317 (1986); Choper, The Religion Clauses of the First Amendment: Reconciling the Conflict, 41 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 673, 681 (1980)(noting “the absence of any principled rationale” in the Court’s Religion Clause jurisprudence); Kurland, The Irrelevance of the Constitution: The Religion Clauses of the First Amendment and the Supreme Court, 24 Vill. L. Rev. 3, 20 (1978).

At the time the First Amendment was adopted, the countries of Europe each maintained their own “Establishment of Religion,” which meant an official government religion enforced by laws requiring attendance at the official church, regular contributions to it, and other preferences in law for members of that church. These establishment policies all involved government coercion to force citizens to support the one favored church, whether Catholic, or Baptist, or Puritan, or whatever.

Almost all of the American colonies had such establishments as well, with legal compulsion or coercion as their hallmark. 6 W. & A. Durant, The Story of Civilization 208-220, 501-506, 523-601, 631-641 (1957); L. Pfeffer, Church, State and Freedom 20-30 (rev. 1st ed. 1967). Professor Joseph Brady, in a seminal historical work on the Establishment Clause, quotes historian Marcus W. Jernegan regarding the typical laws involved in state religions:

“The general rule in those colonies having an established church was to require dissenters to support it by paying tithes or taxes, and also to attend the official church services under penalty. They were also frequently required to submit to various tests or oaths, and to subscribe to the creeds and catechisms of the established church. Sometimes the right to settle in a colony, or the privilege of naturalization, or citizenship, or the right to vote and hold office, depended on submission to religious tests.”

J. Brady, Confusion Twice Confounded: The First Amendment and the Supreme Court 6-7 (1954). See also L. Levy, The Establishment Clause: Religion and the First Amendment 4 (1987).

In Virginia, the home of Jefferson, Madison, and Washington, the Anglican Church was adopted as the Established church in the Colony's original charter in 1606. That charter required all ministers in the Colony to preach Christianity according to Anglican doctrines. L. Levy, supra, n.13, at 3. In 1611, Virginia required all citizens to attend church and observe the Sabbath, and enacted severe punishments for blasphemy, sacrilege, and criticism of the doctrine of the Trinity. Id. The law also required all citizens to embrace Anglican doctrine, and to pay for the maintenance of Anglican churches and ministers. Id., at 3-4. Every clergyman was required to accept the Anglican Thirty-Nine Articles of Faith, and every church was required to follow the liturgy of the Church of England according to the Anglican Book of Common Prayer. Id. at 4.

These coercive practices, and anything like them involving coercion in regard to religion, are what the framers meant to prohibit in adopting the Establishment Clause, for this is what an Establishment of Religion meant at the time. They did not mean, however, to prohibit any voluntary, public, religious speech, or religious expression or symbolism, which do not involve any such coercion, as we will see further below.

The philosophy of the framers of our constitution was drawn heavily from highly influential British philosopher John Locke, who recognized this distinction, writing,

“The care of souls cannot belong to the civil magistrate, because his power consists only in outward force; but true and saving religion consists in the inward persuasion of the mind...Confiscation of estate, imprisonment, torments, nothing of that nature can have any such efficacy as to make men change the inward judgment that they have framed of things.

“It may indeed be alleged that the magistrate may make use of arguments...and procure their salvation. I grant it; but this is common to him with other men. Every man has commission to admonish, exhort, convince another of error, and, by reasoning, to draw him into truth; but to give laws, receive obedience, and compel with the sword, belongs to none but the magistrate. And upon this ground, I affirm that the magistrate’s power extends not to the establishing of any articles of faith, or forms of worship, by the force of his laws. For the laws are of no force at all without penalties, and penalties in this case are absolutely impertinent, because they are not proper to convince the mind.”

Locke, A Letter Concerning Toleration (1684), in 5 The Founder’s Constitution 52, 53 (P. Kurland and R. Lerner, eds. 1987)(hereinafter “Kurland”).

St. George Tucker in Blackstone's Commentaries (1803) later recognized the same distinction between unjustifiable religious coercion and unobjectionable persuasion or expression or recognition of religion, saying that "religion, or the duty we owe to our creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be dictated only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence." Kurland, supra, p. 14, at 96. He continued,

"In vain, therefore, may the civil magistrate interpose the authority of human laws, to prescribe that belief, or produce that conviction, which human reason rejects....The martyr at the stake, glories in his tortures, and proves that human law may punish, but cannot convince...."

Id. at 96. Tucker similarly added,

"Statesmen should countenance [genuine religion] only by exhibiting, in their own example, a conscientious regard to it in those forms which are most agreeable to their own judgments, and by encouraging their fellow citizens to do the same."

Id. at 97.

This same distinction is found as well throughout the writings of Jefferson and Madison. In 1776, Jefferson led the adoption of Virginia's Declaration of Rights. The religious freedom clause in that Declaration stated, “That religion, or the duty we owe to our creator, and the manner of discharging it can be directed only by reason or conviction, not by force or violence; and therefore all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience....” (emphasis added).

Virginia Declaration of Rights, Section 16 (June 12, 1776), Va. Const. art. I, Sect. 16, in Kurland, supra, p. 14, at 70.

After adopting this provision in the state constitution, the Virginia Assembly repealed the prior laws originally adopted by the English Parliament compelling observance of and support for the established English church. But Jefferson insisted as well that the Assembly also repeal its own prior Acts that coerced conformity to the Christian religion by disqualifying dissenters from holding public office and imposing criminal penalties on them. In a famous passage, Jefferson said,

“The error seems not sufficiently eradicated, that the operations of the mind, as well as the acts of the body, are subject to the coercion of the laws....The legitimate powers of government extend to such acts only as are injurious to others. *But it does me no injury for my neighbor to say there are twenty gods, or no god. It neither picks my pocket nor breaks my leg....*Reason and free inquiry are the only effectual agents against error....It is error alone which needs the support of government. Truth can stand by itself.

Subject opinion to coercion: Whom will you make your inquisitors? Fallible men; men governed by bad passions, by private as well as public reasons. And why subject it to coercion?...What has been the effect of coercion? To make one half the world fools, and the other half hypocrites....[W]e cannot effect [truth] by force. Reason and persuasion are the only practicable instruments.”

Notes, in Kurland, supra, p. 14, at 79-80 (emphasis added).

In 1779, Jefferson drafted his “Act for Establishing Religious Freedom,” which again focused on coercion as the problem, distinguishing speech and expression. The Act stated,

“[No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer, on account of his religious opinions or beliefs; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinion in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities.”

Virginia Act for Establishing Religious Freedom, in Kurland, supra, p. 14 at 85. Indeed, the Preamble to the Act suggests that its principles are divinely inspired, saying,

“Whereas Almighty God hath created the mind free; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishments or burthens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy or meanness, and are a departure from the plan of the Holy author of our religion, who being Lord both of body and mind, yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was in his Almighty power to do....”

Id., at 84. This Court has stated that this bill and the history of its ultimate enactment in 1786 by the Virginia General Assembly is “particularly relevant in the search for the First Amendment’s meaning.” McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 437 (1961).

And from its earliest beginnings to this very day, our nation in practice has continued to recognize this distinction between religious coercion and mere expression. The Declaration of Independence appeals “to the Supreme Judge of the world” and to “the laws of nature and of nature’s God,” and proclaims that all men “are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights.” In his first inaugural address, George Washington sought the blessings of God, “that Almighty Being” and “the Great Author of every private and public good.” George Washington, First Inaugural Address, April 30, 1789, in Inaugural Addresses of the Presidents of the United States from George Washington, 1789 to George Bush, 1989 at 1,2 (Bicentennial ed. 1989). Washington, in fact, said “it would be peculiarly improper to omit in [his] first official act [his] fervent supplications to that Almighty Being who rules over the universe...” Id. Almost without exception, Washington’s successors in office have included in their addresses statements of religious sentiment and supplications for God’s assistance in discharging their official obligations.

The very next day after the House of Representatives of the First Congress voted to adopt the Establishment Clause, the House adopted a resolution requesting President Washington to proclaim “a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging the many and signal favors of Almighty God.” Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 675, n.2 (1984). Washington responded by proclaiming November 26, 1789, as a day of thanksgiving in which to offer “our prayers and applications to the Great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions.” Id. This tradition, too, has been continued throughout our history by virtually every President. Id.

It was the First Congress also that adopted the practice of opening daily sessions of the House and Senate with prayers by an official chaplain. Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783, 787-788 (1983). Madison was a member of the House Committee that proposed the practice, and he voted in favor of it. Id. at 788 n.8. This practice has also continued to this very day.

Congress’s early chaplains even conducted Sunday worship services in the hall of the House of Representatives, and both Jefferson and Madison attended these services while serving as President. 1

Stokes, Church and State in the United States 499-507.

Moreover, at least since Chief Justice John Marshall, the very sessions of the U.S. Supreme Court have been opened with a crier respectfully requesting “God Save the United States and this Honorable Court.” Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 446 (1962) (Stewart, J., dissenting).

Our nation’s leaders from the framers to this day engaged in these practices without any concern that they somehow violated the Establishment Clause because they did not involve any coercion, only expression. Those attending the inaugural ceremonies of our Presidents were not required to accept or support the religious sentiments those Presidents expressed. No one was required to give thanks and say prayers on days designated for that purpose by our Presidents, from Washington to Roosevelt to Reagan. No one was ever required to attend the chaplain’s invocations opening sessions of Congress, nor to accept or support the religious beliefs expressed by the chaplain.

For all of the foregoing reasons, we urge this Court to adopt a new standard evaluating alleged Establishment Clause violations based on whether the challenged policy, practice, or action involves coercion in regard to religion. It is long past time to establish a principled foundation for Establishment Clause law rooted in the Constitutional text and our nation’s history and cultural heritage.

B. The Coercion Standard Is Practical and Workable

The coercion standard for Establishment Clause violations would not be a wooden, inflexible, mechanistic rule of law. Whether coercion exists in a particular circumstance would depend on the facts of each case as well. For example, the coercion standard would not require any change in decisions regarding school prayer in elementary school or secondary schools. The youth of the students and the social pressures involved easily satisfy a flexible and realistic vision of coercion, leaving students feeling compelled to participate in an effective religious ceremony contrary to their will.

But outside of school prayer, the coercion standard would likely result in a finding of no establishment in almost all other cases involving mere expression rather than coercion. For example, a newly elected President saying a prayer in his Inaugural address would not involve coercion, nor would a Presidential Proclamation of a Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer, nor would the chaplains praying at the start of each Congressional day, where adults obviously from many backgrounds are free to accept or reject what they hear, or forego attendance at any prayer altogether. Mere speech or expression by itself does not involve coercion, precisely for these reasons. In Jefferson's terms, the practice in these cases "neither picks my pocket nor breaks my leg."

The same would be true in cases involving mere symbolism, recognition of traditions, or other, similar expression, such as Christmas holiday displays, or monuments or paintings referencing religious subjects such as the Ten Commandments, or Moses receiving the law from God. No longer would mere cross cases from all over the country have to come before this Court, or even the federal courts at all. Of course, the facts of a particular case can still raise the issue of coercion.

Moreover, taxation forcing contribution for a program targeted specifically to aid religion would be unconstitutional, just as the framers strongly objected to taxation specifically to aid religion in their time. Such programs are too similar to the mandatory financial support to established churches under the establishment of religion practices the framers intended to ban.

But allowing churches to participate in general secular programs on the same terms as everyone else would not be prohibited. For example, a voucher program aiding all schools, public and private, religious or non-religious, that allowed religious schools to participate on the same terms and conditions as everyone else, would not involve an unconstitutional establishment of religion. Such a program would involve compelling aid to education, not religion. Indeed, excluding some schools because of their religion would raise a coercion issue, analogous to the historical establishment practice of denying access to government benefits based on religious views.

II. THE VOLUNTARY, ROTATING, INVOCATIONS OFFERED BY CITIZENS OF THE TOWN OF GREECE TO SOLEMNIZE OPENINGS OF TOWN BOARD MEETINGS ARE NOT AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION BECAUSE THEY DO NOT INVOLVE COERCION.

With a clear, simple standard rooted in the text of the Constitution and its surrounding history, this case is easily resolved. The voluntary, rotating, legislative prayers offered by citizens of the Town of Greece to solemnize openings of Town Board meetings do not involve an unconstitutional establishment of religion because they do not involve coercion of any sort. They do not involve anything like the coercive historic practices of religious establishments known by the Founders, as discussed above, which is what they were prohibiting with the term “Establishment of Religion.”

Those hearing the prayers remain free to interpret, accept, or reject their meaning as they each choose. No one is forced or coerced to accept or reject or believe or do anything. They can take the prayers as an expression of solemnity and seriousness for the meeting about to take place. They can take the prayers as an expression of respect for the religious heritage of the nation, regardless of the diverging religious opinions of those hearing the prayers. They can take the prayers as an expression of some religious message, which they are perfectly free to accept or reject. However those hearing each prayer interpret or understand it, the prayers are in any event just expression, which inherently does not involve coercion of any sort. In Jefferson’s illuminating words, again, the prayers “neither pick[] my pocket nor break[] my leg.”

In our daily lives, we often see or hear the expression of messages with which we disagree, sometimes strongly, or otherwise find objectionable or inappropriate. The national political conventions of the two major parties are broadcast on the networks, with something surely to offend everyone. But without coercion, the Establishment Clause does not provide a foundation for the courts to prohibit any speech, expression, or symbolism. The public still has democratic control over national and state leaders, and can exercise its will over the messages, expression, or symbolism included in national or state memorials through that means. But there is nothing in the Constitution to limit such mere expression.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted.

PETER J. FERRARA

Counsel of Record

20594 Woodmere Court

Sterling, VA 20165

(703) 582-8466

peterferrara@msn.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

American Civil Rights Union

August 2, 2013