Policy on Disclosures of Interest and Possible Conflicts of Interest

The Antitrust Law Journal publishes analysis and commentary on legal, economic, and policy issues in antitrust and competition law. The Journal is a forum for sharing ideas with antitrust and consumer-protection lawyers, economists, judges, policymakers, and academics. It is not a forum for advancing the interests of clients or sponsors.

Authors who disagree with articles in the Journal are welcome to submit responsive articles for consideration for publication. In pending or controversial matters, the Journal may solicit articles with competing perspectives for the same issue or a later issue.

To ensure that articles published in the Journal present scholarship that is free of undisclosed influence from clients or sponsors, all authors are required to adhere to this policy. This policy seeks to promote the reputation and integrity of the Journal and its authors. To serve those goals, this policy requires authors to disclose material interests that might negatively influence a reasonable reader’s perception of the scholarly independence of an article.

The Journal reserves the option to request additional disclosures when, in its sole discretion, those disclosures are needed to evaluate possible interests or conflicts of interest. It also reserves the option to decline to publish any article if an author declines to provide any requested information or if the Journal, in its sole discretion, concludes that the article does not satisfy the letter or spirit of this policy.

The Journal will decide the appropriate response to disclosed information. If the Journal accepts an article after receiving a disclosure covered by this policy, it may require the authors, in the article, to disclose relevant information on interests or potential conflicts of interest. That disclosure might appear in a footnote or otherwise.

Disclosures Required from Authors

When an article of any type is submitted to be considered for publication in the Journal, each author must disclose, in writing, whether any of the following circumstances applies to the article or its preparation:

1. Involvement in Legal Proceedings: Whether, in the two years before the submission of the article, any author, or any institution with which the author is affiliated or employed, is or has been involved in any legal proceedings that are related to the specific content of the article (whether the article mentions the matters or not). For this purpose, “proceedings” include actual or threatened government investigations, administrative proceedings, or judicial proceedings. The disclosure should also state whether the author or the author’s institution anticipates being involved in these types of matters within the next twelve months.
2. Funding: Whether the article was funded in whole or in part, either directly or indirectly, by a client or any other person or entity. For purposes of this disclosure, “funding” includes anything of value, including direct payments, grants, or reimbursements of expenses related to the preparation of the article. Indirect funding includes, but is not limited to, article-related grants and other payments to the author or to any institution with which the author is affiliated or employed. Funding sources that fall within this policy include any client, entity, or person other than any institution with which an author is affiliated or employed.

3. Other financial or working relationships: Whether there are any other financial or working relationships between (a) the author, or any institution with which the author is affiliated or employed, and (b) any client, other person, or entity that may have an interest in the specific content of the article. This policy covers relationships such as consulting arrangements, retentions as counsel or as an expert, paid speaking engagements, reimbursement for academic expenses, and payments to institutes or clinics. The policy covers relationships during the two years before the submission of the article, as well as relationships that the author has reason to believe are likely to arise in the next twelve months.

4. Review of the article: Whether any client or other interested party has a right to review, or has reviewed, the article submitted to the Journal. Authors must also disclose whether they have made any revisions in response to suggestions from any client or interested party. An interested party is any client, entity, or person whose relationship with an author falls within section 1, 2, or 3 above, whether or not the party has provided funding to the author or any institution with which the author is affiliated or employed.

5. Other material facts: Each author must disclose any other relationships or facts that could negatively affect a reasonable reader’s assessment of the scholarly independence of the article.

6. Confidentiality: The Journal will use its best efforts to treat all disclosed information as confidential. Without the consent of the authors, the Journal will not disseminate disclosed information beyond the Journal’s editorial board, except as stated above with reference to accepted articles.
